GREEN FOR CONTROLLER.

Connolly Offers to Surrender His Office to an Honest Democrat—Tweed, Hall, and Sweeny in Great Consternation.

Considerable consternation was caused yesterday among the friends of SWEENY, TWEED and HALL, by the announcement of the fact that Controller CONNOLLY, at the suggestion of Ex-Mayor HAVEMEYER, was prepared to hand his office over to Mr. ANDREW H. GREEN, of the Central Park Commission. This was clearly tantamount to the surrender of all his papers and documents to a gentleman who will undoubtedly make the fairest examination of them in the interest of the public. This movement was about the last thing that SWEENY, TWEED, and HALL calculated upon. They had intended to throw CONNOLLY overboard, to appoint STORRS, who is now Deputy Controller, temporarily in his place, and afterward relieving STORRS, put in a man of their own choice who would manipulate the accounts to the complete exculpation of his masters. CONNOLLY, who was certainly not more guilty than the rest, objected to being made the sole victim of the exposure, and hence the shock to set to the fair treatment of the papers in his office. The correspondence which has passed between the parties to the new plan, will be found in our editorial columns of to-day.

There is much speculation as to the probable course of Mayor HALL under these circumstances. There can be no doubt, however, that he is equally implicated with the other three in the Ring frauds, and that he will be held to a strict accountability therefor.

Facts and Rumors Around the City Hall.

Saturday is usually a very quiet day at the City Hall, and yesterday proved to be an unusually quiet one. Very little talk at speculation was indulged in as to the effect of the Investigating Committee's report, except by a few anxious clerks, who were very desirous of knowing whether it would affect the payment of their salaries on the 1st of next month. The majority appeared to think it would not, while others could not see how the Controller could pay salaries unless he was permitted to raise the money to pay them with. The gang of laborers who were waiting all day Friday in the new Court-house for their wages was dispersed very quickly, the money being forthcoming at an early hour of the day. The Investigating Committee held no regular session, but it was understood that on Monday they will have a report to make, and that on that, or the succeeding day, the Controller will meet them and give them all the information they desire on such points as they have not yet touched on. About noon Gov. HOFFMAN called at the City Hall, passed up to the office of his father-in-law, Mr. STARKWEATHER, and remained with him about ten minutes, after which he left without making any further calls. He did not visit the Mayor's office. The Mayor was with Gen. MCCLELLAN all of the morning at the latter's office, and did not reach the City Hall until 4 o'clock. After giving positive orders to admit no one to his private office, he commenced the preparation of a document which was afterward copied by his Private Secretary in minifold, but the nature of it was kept a profound secret, and the most persistent pumping failed to elicit the slightest information in regard to it. In the Controller's office business appeared to be at a stand-still. The members of the Investigating Committee even failed to make their usual visit, and by 4 o'clock him and all the other departments were deserted and closed for the day. Several bills, the money for which was lying in the Controller's office awaiting the session of Judge BARNARD, were refused payment yesterday.

CONNOLLY'S DEFENDERS.

Mass Meeting of His Adherents, for the Sixth Ward—Resolutions Applauding the Controller now His Method of Meeting Charges.

A meeting of the friends of Controller CONNOLLY was held at 8 o'clock, yesterday afternoon, in the SIXTH WARD HOTEL. Its object was to indorse the action of the Controller in refusing to resign, and sympathize with him in his struggle with "official assassins." Mr. TIMOTHY DALY was elected President, JEREMIAH COUGHLAN Vice-President, and Mr. THOMAS S. KELLY Secretary of the meeting. The Chairman stated the objects of the meeting in a speech in which he expressed much sympathy with and confidence in Mr. CONNOLLY for the manly discharge of duty, and because he had done that his enemies now sought to sacrifice him. At the conclusion of the Chairman's remarks three loud and hearty cheers were given for RICHARD B. CONNOLLY.

The Secretary then read the following resolutions which were heartily applauded throughout, and which, on the conclusion, were unanimously adopted.

Whereas, The proceedings had on the injunction to restrain the City authorities from issuing further bonds, or making further appropriations, under the allegation of misappropriation and fraud, by four of the Supervisors, have developed the fact that no consideration of the Judiciary warrants fear or favor in any one of the accused, on the act of one, both in point of law and common sense, cannot be separated from the acts of the others, or of any one of them; and

Whereas, During the pendency of how the charges as contained and set up prevail, and in order to screen the most active, able and wily members of the Board, who had control of the Department, a private meeting was treated to unlike the custom of the associated four, a conspiracy was formed to sacrifice one or more of the number in order to screen the participation of the chief aiders and abettors in the alleged charges; and

Whereas, In order to carry out this vile act of political treachery and consummation thereof an old and reliable public servant, one of more of the tried friends of Hon. RICHARD B. CONNOLLY have consented to sacrifice him, and through threats and intimidation seek to coerce his action and force his resignation as Controller of New-York City and County though the absence of malfeasance has not yet rendered the judicial inquiry requisite to fix one fraud committed by Mr. CONNOLLY in his individual or corporate capacity; and

Whereas, The power behind the throne to make Judges and necessitate Controllers has been evoked to insure the degradation of an esteemed citizen, a sound Democrat and a warm-hearted Irishman, and the pleasant duty devolved upon the Court of Common Pleas has devised from the usual and impartial course of a Court of justice in giving its judgment, and specially selected Mr. CONNOLLY for annulled for an unnecessary amount of advertising, no doubt to inculcate the high sense of morality entertained by the judicial mind, and put forward by the so-defended acts similar to that recorded in Holy Writ of "Satan preaching Christ;" therefore, be it

Resolved, That our sympathies are with Controller CONNOLLY in this struggle for fair play, and an equal responsibility with his associates. If there be fraud proved all must have an equal distribution of censure or punishment. Let there be equal justice "even though the heavens should fall," and we hereby call on Mr. CONNOLLY to resist them in the most determined manner by all means in his power. Conspirators who seek to bring down his gray hairs to a dishonored grave; and,

Resolved, That a meeting assembling at ten o'clock precisely on the 22d inst. at the residence of the friends of Mr. CONNOLLY, and that a committee from each Ward be organized to carry out the same and that every lover of fair play, every hater of despotism and advocate of free votes, every friend to the rights of Democracy in New-York, and who have suffered from tyranny and oppression, be invited to attend and swell numbers from every quarter.

Mr. WM. C. GOVER next addressed the meeting. He said he had still abiding faith in the acts and integrity of Controller CONNOLLY, and he believed he had still about as high a place in the estimation of the people of the community. Nothing was proven against him, and no dark shadow rested upon his character, and the speaker didn't believe he had ever abstracted a single dollar from the county. He was the friend of the hearing man and the mechanic. [Applause.] It was said he had grown rich, but he had married a lady who had brought to him a large fortune, and in the investing of whom money in bonds, coupled with his own legitimate allowances, he had largely advanced his original property. He also said he had robbed the City Treasury, but that was not proven.

Mr. PETER MCCORRY next spoke, and alluded to the fact of Mr. CONNOLLY sending his son to battle for his country, when radicals who sought to destroy him and cause a division in the Democratic Party, stayed at home. The names to which he referred were TWEED, HALL and SWEENY, were by no means eulogistic. The name of this gallant triumvirate was, in fact, received with a hiss of disapprobation. In conclusion loud cheers were given for RICHARD B. CONNOLLY.

It was next resolved that a committee of organization be appointed to make preparations for a grand mass meeting and torch-light procession in favor of the Controller, three delegates from each Ward to compose said committee. This committee will meet on Tuesday evening next at Thirteenth-street and University-place.

The meeting then adjourned.

What a Member of the Americus Thinks.

A member of the Americus Club, in a conversation had yesterday with our reporter, said that he was certain that there was hardly a single member of the broken Ring and its numerous collateral circles, who was not secretly making the most strenuous exertions to hide his ill-gotten gains. INGERSOLL, he declared upon personal knowledge, had drawn $65,000 only yesterday morning, out of one of the banks where he kept his account, and from several other large banks where he had dealings, he had drawn out every cent, converting the cash into United States securities, transferred to other parties for safe keeping. INGERSOLL, he continued, had been advancing the money, since the injunction was issued, to pay off the contingent expenses of the Departments, expecting a dissolution of the injunction and a speedy reimbursement. The greatest consternation existed, he said, among the members of the Ring. TWEED, he could safely assert, felt very sorely tried, notwithstanding is outside he would maintain a bold front and undismayed countenance. He spoke of INGERSOLL, GARVEY, MILLER, KEYSER, KING, WATSON, (deceased,) and WOODWARD, among the lesser lights, as having been the most daring in their fraudulent transactions. MILLER, KING, and INGERSOLL, he continued, assumed an air of indifference in public, still they were all very much concerned about the safety of their stolen property. GARVEY, more than all, evinced the greatest anxiety for his household goods, and was, apparently, thoroughly scared.

Just before the disclosures in the TWEED case informant strolled into the Astor House, where he saw INGERSOLL, KING and GARVEY seated at a table discussing the merits of several bottles of Rodgers'. He remarked to them that they would soon see the time when they would not luxuriate upon such costly cuisines or dine upon such rich wines, adding that their wholesale robbery of the people would eventually be discovered, and what then? "Oh! don't be alarmed, my dear fellow," said KING, "we have our trunks packed, and you may rest assured we'll put away enough to make ourselves comfortable." This, he said, was spoken in jest, but from appearances it may prove an unlooked for reality. In concluding, the gentleman, who is a disguised member of the Americus, said, "Those vouchers, which were said to have been stolen from Controller CONNOLLY'S office, I do not believe ever left the new Court-house, but were burned in the building, and the panic of Miss broken as a blind."

Sheriff Brennan Non-Committal.

The office of Sheriff is one of considerable influence, and its incumbent is necessarily a man of great political power. Such being the case, Hon. MATTHEW T. BRENNAN, could not well remain a simple looker-on in the present complication of municipal affairs, but would be easily called upon to show his hand, and—if it were possible—be driven to espouse one side or the other of the divided Democracy.

But the Sheriff is not to be driven, and not to be bought, and in a conversation held with our reporter yesterday he stated decidedly that he had no intention of permitting himself to be drawn into the snare in which the Ring is at present netted. Being asked as to the truth of a statement made in a certain morning paper that he had been interviewed by Messrs. TWEED and SWEENY upon the question, he denied absolutely the whole story, and declared that he had not conversed with one of the leaders of the Ring within the past three or four weeks. He also characterized a story which appeared in a weekly paper to the effect that he had called upon Mr. TWEED at his office recently, and been refused admittance, as altogether untrue.

"I have my own duties to attend to here," he said, "and I don't propose to mix myself up with their squabbles in any way. It is, of course, a most unfortunate affair, but it is not a political matter at all; it is between man and man. Of course, it is on the eve of an election, and the whole difficulty will be tacked on to the party. But about the 15th of October will settle things, when everything will find its level, and I am going to wait. I see a good many people here, and of course we talk the affair over freely, but I see no reason why I should meddle with it, and I mean to steer clear of the whole thing."

Asked as to his view of the "vouchers" affair, he expressed his opinion that "whoever took them knew just what he wanted, and where it was. "Why," continued the Sheriff, "my hand would not go into the hole in the glass that they say those vouchers were taken out of!" The Sheriff has a pretty fair-sized hand—still there is something in the inference to be drawn from this remark.

"These men have all been friends for a good many years, and now they differ among themselves, and it is very hard to say how it is all going to end. However, about a month from now will settle it. But BARNARD seemed to hint at prosecuting these men! That would be a terrible disgrace."

The Sheriff evidently considered the condition of things disgraceful, and was decided in his determination not to let his name get mixed up with it.

An Old Man and his Wife Murdered With a Spade—Suicide of the Murderer.

A terrible double murder was committed in the town of Franklin, De Kalb County, Illinois, on Monday, 11th inst., by CARL DONNERFELD, a native of Prussia. His victims were CARL and MARY WEISEMBERG, man and wife, aged sixty-one and sixty-three years. DONNERFELD also attempted to murder another man named MEYERS, but he escaped with only slight injuries. WEISEMBERG and his wife, who are also Prussians, came to this country some twelve years ago. Being quite old and owning a farm, they wrote to DONNERFELD and made an arrangement with him to come to Franklin and carry on the farm and maintain them as long as they lived, and in return he was to inherit the property remaining at their death. They seemed to live peaceably together until a few weeks since, when dissent arose among them, which resulted in the sale of the farm to MEYERS, with a reserved interest for DONNERFELD. On Monday morning, while MEYERS was milking the cows, DONNERFELD made an assault upon him with a spade. He evaded his blows, and DONNERFELD then rushed into the house and to WEISEMBERG'S room, where the old gentleman lay sick, and soon killed him with the spade. WEISEMBERG'S wife, hearing a noise in his room, went to see what was the matter. DONNERFELD met her at the door, and at once dispatched her with the same spade with which he had killed her husband. He then rushed to the barn and hung himself. When discovered by the neighbors, whom MEYERS had alarmed, he was dead.

WALTER MONTGOMERY.

Confirmation of the Tidings of His Death—Details of His Suicide.

The news of the decease of Mr. WALTER MONTGOMERY, transmitted by the cable, has, we are pained to say, been confirmed. "On Saturday evening, Sept. 2," says the London Times, "Mr. LANGHOLM, the Deputy Coroner for Westminster, held an inquest at Shelley's Hotel, Albemarle-street, Bond-street, concerning the death of WALTER MONTGOMERY, aged forty-four. Mr. HENRY BELTON, No. 134 Regent-street, said he was an old and intimate friend of deceased. On Wednesday last he saw the deceased, it being the day of his marriage, and he then appeared to enjoy good health, and was apparently in excellent spirits. He was not aware of anything calculated to depress the spirits of Mr. MONTGOMERY, unless it were his late connection with the Gaiety Theatre, where he was manager, and it had resulted unfavorably toward him from a commercial point of view. Mr. MONTGOMERY had sustained heavy losses at that theatre, and every one regarded the money as irretrievably lost. Deceased had resolved on emigrating to America, and with that view had paid the passage money for himself and his wife, and was to have sailed on the 7th inst. Mr. MONTGOMERY was not liable to occasional depression, and had never threatened to commit suicide. He was a man of great perseverance, and went through the labor of six men; but naturally he was very excitable. MRS. LALEAH MONTGOMERY, No. 2 Stafford-street, Bond-street, who was led into Court in a state of great mental excitement, said she believed she was deceased's husband. On Friday night, about 10½ o'clock, she was lying on a couch in the sitting-room, and the deceased was in the adjoining bedroom looking at some articles of clothing which were in a box. During the previous two or three days he had been depressed in spirits more than usual, though for the past six weeks he appeared to be in a despondingly state of mind, arising from his losses at the theatre in connection with Gaiety Theatre. He had never threatened to destroy himself, but he often prayed that he might be at rest. She believed her husband was of unsound mind when he committed the act. On Friday forenoon he was very ill till about 2 o'clock, when he got better and was rather cheerful, but about 7 o'clock he again became worse. He became quite mad. She was listening to his movements in the bedroom on Friday night, and heard him exclaim, "LALEAH, good-by: God bless you. I am gone, I am gone." She then heard the report of a pistol. She did not know that he had a pistol. The landlady on hearing her screams came upstairs and entered the bedroom where deceased was lying for her. She could see no more. The bedroom was in darkness. FREDERICK SMILLEY, No. 2 Albemarle-street, proprietor of the hotel, said he was standing at the hotel door on Friday night, about 11 o'clock, and, hearing the report of a pistol and the screams of a lady, he ran to No. 2 Stafford-street, and on going upstairs into a room on the first floor, found the deceased seated on the floor, the head resting on a chair. He raised the deceased, but he was quite dead. Medical aid was at once sent for. He found on the floor, near to the deceased, a small pocket-pistol, and on the bed several teeth. WM. MASTERS said he was standing in front of the hotel-door, on Friday night, about 10½ o'clock, when he heard the report of a pistol. He went to No. 2 Stafford-street, and on them said by the landlady that a gentleman had shot himself, and he was requested to go upstairs. He was the first who entered the bedroom, and found deceased in a sitting position on the floor by the side of the bed, his head hanging down. Blood was oozing from the mouth, and a pistol was lying under the chair. A quarter of an hour elapsed before he lifted the pistol, and it was not then warm. Mr. HENRY HARRISON, M.R.C.S., No. 10 Grafton-street, said he was called to see deceased on Friday night, shortly after 11 o'clock. He was dead, but the body was warm. Blood was all over the mouth, and issuing from the mouth there was a hole in the roof of it large enough to admit the finger of a man. He had since made a post-mortem examination. The pistol had been placed in the mouth before being discharged. The bullet had entered the roof of the mouth near to the teeth, had struck against the frontal bone, which caused it to rebound toward the back of the head, and subsequently lodged in the left hemisphere of the brain, which he found it. The bullet was flattened by striking against the frontal bone. Had the bullet not struck the frontal bone, it would have gone out at the top of the skull, and deceased would not have sustained very serious injury. Death would be instantaneous. Mr. JOHN STURGIS, stage manager of the Gaiety Theatre, said he had deceased from Tuesday last to Friday in good spirits. Mr. MONTGOMERY had sustained heavy losses with that theatre, but he did not think they let him to commit suicide. Deceased had money to meet every claim. He thought the excitement of his marriage caused deceased to become of unsound mind. The deceased was of very excitable temperament. The jury returned a verdict that the deceased committed suicide while in a state of unsound mind."

Singular Disappearance of a Clergyman's Wife.

On the afternoon of Sept. 5, Mrs. E. C. MITCHELL, wife of Rev. EDWARD C. MITCHELL, of Detroit, left Portland, Me., for Philadelphia, and reached Boston about 7 P. M. The hotels being crowded she resolved to continue her journey, although her original intention was to stop a night in Boston. She went to the United States Hotel, and from there telegraphed, at 8½ P. M., to her father-in-law, Mr. E. P. MITCHELL, President of the Commonwealth National Bank, Philadelphia, that she would take the 9 P. M. train for New-York by way of Springfield and New-Haven. Having half an hour to spare, she wrote a note in pencil to her husband at Detroit, informing him that she had telegraphed to her father that she would take the 9 P. M. train, and that on her arrival in Philadelphia on the 6th she would telegraph the fact to him. This is the last authentic information her friends have of her. Rev. Mr. MITCHELL receiving nothing from her on Tuesday, and after telegraphing in various directions on Wednesday sent out in search of his wife, and was joined by his brother from Philadelphia. They went to Boston and found the porter of the United States Hotel, (where her name was registered,) who said he believed he recollected attending the lady to the Worcester Depot, carrying her satchel and travelling-shawl. The conductor of the trains between Boston and New-York had a dim recollection of the lady, and the sleeping-car conductor relates a story of a lady corresponding to the descriptions given, who was greatly fatigued and desired a berth, which, owing to the crowded state of the cars, he could not give her. She was then accommodated with a berth by Mrs. AMES, who had secured an entire compartment for herself. From this point all trace of the lady disappears. Mrs. AMES can relieve in a measure the deep anxiety of the grief-stricken relatives by informing them who her kindly-treated companion was and what she knows of her.

A circumstance is related in Mrs. MITCHELL'S letter to her husband, which may or may not have importance. She says she was kindly treated on the way from Portland to Boston by an elderly gentleman, who offered to conduct her to a second or third rate hotel, but on her declining to go to any but a first-class one, attempted to sustain her journey. There is no evidence that he came further in this direction than Boston.

Mrs. MITCHELL is a lady of quite prepossessing appearance, about medium height, fair complexion, with brown hair and eyes, and wore, when she left Portland, a brown travelling-dress of mixed linen and worsted, and a black hat trimmed with red roses. She carried a brown linen duster, and the small satchel and traveling-shawl mentioned by the porter. Her jewelry consisted of a gold hunting-case watch, with the mark of "Breitling & Lederich, Chaux-de-Fonds, Switzer," No. 27,606, upon it; a plain gold marriage ring, and a set ring, which, on opening at the sides, exposed a lilac of hair, and on the inner surface of which was the inscription, "Ned to Louie, June 29, 1862." Her baggage, of which no trace has been found either, consisted, certainly, of a Saratoga trunk with a card on the top marked Rev. E. C. MITCHELL, and probably two other trunks which her friends in Portland make no mention of her taking, although she had three on her arrival there. One of these was of sole leather, covered with duck, and inscribed on the ends "E. C. M., Phila," and the other was black, with green bands.

The New-Jersey Railroad Lease.

In the New-Jersey Court of Chancery at Trenton, yesterday, Mr. BROWNING continued his argument in favor of the plaintiffs and against the lease. He quoted authorities showing that Directors cannot bind a corporation. A railroad, he said, had no right to do any business not laid down in its charter, and one Company had no right to make a lease with another without first getting the permission of the Legislature. The lease was never assented to by the complainants or the stockholders, and on that ground counsel claimed that the lease was void.

SHOCKING BARBARITY.

A Little Boy Starved to Death—A Circus Performer the Culprit—A Terrible Story.

PISMIRE LANDING, N. C., Sept. 16.—A terrible case of death from starvation has just been discovered at Stormville. It appears that a French woman, who is attached to O'BRIEN'S Menagerie and Circus, performs among other feats, the cannon trick, as it is styled. That is, the woman takes a six-pounder on her shoulder, and a boy gets up and fires it off. This little fellow was the victim of unheard-of cruelty. While stopping at Stormville this woman tied the little boy's hands behind his back and shut him up in a room alone. He begged the cook of the hotel to put a ladder up to the window and give him a piece of bread and butter. She had to throw it on the floor, where the boy obtained it and ate it up. This woman had another boy, which was her own. He went and told the woman of the above manner of getting food to him. She appeared very angry, and going to the boy's room, said she "would not be surprised if he had asked for some candy or cake, but the idea of asking for bread and butter! How dare you do so when I told you if you did I would pound you." The little fellow begged her not to whip him, he would not do it again. He did not look as though he had a drop of blood in his body. The reason she starved him was to prevent him growing any heavier. She bought him in Paris for $100, and of course she had no love or feeling for him except to make money. The doctor who attended him said he died of starvation. The show is in Pawlings, and parties have started from Stormville for that place, to inform the authorities and have some legal action taken in the case. The boy was buried today. The woman spoken of travels in conjunction with a man known as Atalie, the Man of the Iron Jaws.

[This circus is the same that created the riot at Pawlings, mentioned in our dispatches yesterday.]

WEST INDIES.

Land Difficulties in Jamaica—Commencement of the Rainy Season—Aid for Destitute Cubans.

KINGSTON, Jam., Sept. 12.—A cyclone was experienced forty miles to the southward of Jamaica yesterday afternoon, traveling westwardly. It was not felt in this Island. One hundred summonses have just been issued against negro squatters and their white allies. It is asserted that such a wholesale summoning as will bring into the same Court 100 defendants and 500 witnesses, from one district, by one road, and on the same day, will be a great temptation to insurrection; whereas, the settlement of one case would have settled all; and that the object of the whole business is to fee the lawyers. A memorial to the Home Government is in course of signature by political agitators who were acquitted of complicity in the rebellion of 1865.

KINGSTON, Jam., Sept. 13.—The rainy season has set in. A bazar is to be held here to raise money for the support of the destitute Cubans now in this city; but the project receives little or no sympathy from the citizens.

THE WEATHER.

Struggle of Storms and Probabilities.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 16—7 P. M.—The barometer has fallen slightly at the Pacific and Rocky Mountain stations, and hazy weather is reported, which is probably connected with the extensive fires lately reported in Oregon. The pressure has fallen, but is now rising in Minnesota. The highest barometer extends north-eastward over the Ohio Valley, and the area of low pressure when was Friday afternoon on Lake Erie has extended north-east and eastward, and is now spreading over New-England, where rain prevailed during the night, and cloudy weather is now reported. A small area of rain has extended from Tennessee and Northern Georgia north-eastward and is probably now off Cape Hatteras. Local rains have fallen on the immediate Gulf coast during the day. Eastern winds in the Middle and Western States have generally veered through the south-east to west and north-west. Southerly winds have prevailed from the Ohio Valley northward, with threatening weather on Lake Superior. Cloudy and clearing weather continues in the Mississippi valley.

PROBABILITIES.

Partially cloudy and clearing weather, with rising barometer, is probable for New-England on Sunday, and very generally east of the Mississippi River. The conditions will remain favorable for rains on the immediate Gulf coast in the course of the day. Elsinr barometer and pleasant weather are indicated for the upper Lakes and the North-west.

Mysterious Murder.

UTICA, N. Y., Sept. 16.—On Wednesday night last, WILLIAM ENDE, of Sangerfield, was murdered by his wife. It is believed that ENDE and his wife quarreled while the husband was intoxicated. The wife was very roughly handled at first, but obtaining a whiffletree, she struck her husband on the head, knocking him down, and so severely beating him that he died on Thursday morning of his injuries. The wife says that near midnight on Wednesday, she was awakened by a colored man standing by the side of the bed occupied by herself and husband; that being very much frightened she jumped from the bed, concealing herself in an out-building until morning; when returning to the house she found her husband lying on the bed dying, and a bloody whiffletree by the bedside. This story seems hardly probable, and Mrs. ENDE has been held for murder.

Delegates to New-York Republican State Convention.

UTICA, N. Y., Sept. 16.—ROSCOE CONKLING, E. A. BARNS and ELI AVERY were to-day chosen Delegates from the First District of Oneida to the Republican State Convention. Strong resolutions were adopted in favor of Gen. GRANT, Senator CONKLING and reorganization of the Republican Party in New-York City. A contesting delegation is made up from the District.

Arrival of the Bremen Steam. ship Hermann.

The steam-ship Hermann, which left Bremen on Sept. 2 and Southampton on Sept. 3 reached this port yesterday. She brings tidings fresher by two days than those by the Scotia.

New-Jersey State Educational Commission.

The Legislature of New-Jersey at its last session enacted a special school law, imposing a tax of two mills on a dollar upon the rateables of the State for educational purposes. They also established a State Educational Commission, consisting of Rev. Dr. M'COSH, President of Princeton College; Rev. Dr. CAMPBELL, President of Rutgers College; Ex-Speaker PATTERSON, of the Legislature; Messrs. JOHN T. FOSTER, CHAS. NORDHOFF, C. D. DESBLER, and others. These gentlemen held a meeting at Newark a few days since, and after a careful review of the present system of the State proposed a number of practical amendments to be added to the School laws at the next session of the State Legislature. The principal amendment was the creation of the office of Inspector of Public Schools, making one for each Congressional District, at a salary of $2,000. Night schools will be established by law in every town of 10,000 inhabitants; in towns of less population their establishments will be decided by vote. It will be recommended to establish high schools in each district that may be capable of preparing the pupils for colleges. Also to establish twenty-one scholarships in the State, at a cost of about $17,000, and the scholar be permitted to choose the college he would desire. A committee from the Board will confer with the Trustees of the State Reform School as to whether that school would not be better as part of the school system of the State. The Commission will meet semi-monthly in Trenton, on the 20th and 30th, to confer with all interested in the cause of education.

WASHINGTON NEWS.

The Means Confidential Retained of the Treasury Department Against Implied Responsibility—Action of the Heads of the War and Treasury Departments—Currency Statement.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 16.—A statement having recently been published respecting the defalcation of HODGE, derived from the Pay-master-General's office, the following information has been derived in a similar way from prominent gentlemen connected with the Treasurer's office, and may, therefore, be considered as authorized reply to the Pay Department. The attempt of the Pay Department to foist upon the Treasurer's office the responsibility for the failure to discover, at an earlier date, the misappropriation of public funds by Paymaster HODGE, is regarded by the Treasury officials as entirely unwarranted by the facts. The absurdity of the attempt is, it is claimed by them, apparent to all familiar with the mode of disbursing public funds, and would render the statements put forth unworthy of attention had they not been extensively circulated and made the occasion of partisan attack on the administration of the Treasury. The grounds for holding the Treasurer responsible, as presented in the Pay Department version, were, it will be remembered, the following:

First—The letter addressed by the Treasurer to the Pay-masters-General on the 9th of May, 1865, in which he said:

"If instructions should be issued from your office directing all Pay-masters to report to this office the balances remaining to their credit at the close of each week, designating the place of such deposit, I think the present system might be made to work safely."

In accordance with this suggestion the Pay-master-General forthwith issued a circular requiring all Pay-masters to report their balances weekly to the Treasurer. It is claimed by the Pay Department that a proper comparison of these reports at the Treasury with those from the various depositories showing the balances held by them to the credit of disbursing officers, would have led to the discovery of any defalcation. In the second place, the Pay Department alleges that the payment by the Treasurer by checks drawn by Pay-master HODGE, payable to cash or bearer for large amounts, afforded him facilities for the improper withdrawal of money which they would not have enjoyed had the circular of the Secretary of the Treasury of Nov. 28, 1860, concerning the disbursement of the public money been complied with. To the first allegation the Treasury officials reply that the letter of Gen. STIMMER was never intended to be construed for assuming for the Treasurer the responsibility for the proper disbursement of money by disbursing officers of the Pay Department, or as absolving that Department from the responsibility of keeping all proper checks on the officers. Experience soon demonstrated that the reports required of Pay-masters were no protection against fraud. Even in cases of honest officers the balances reported by them would always be less than the amount reported by depositories by the just amounts of their outstanding checks. In case of an officer like Major HODGE, who disbursed a half million or more every month, the discrepancies arising from this cause between the two balances reported would be so great as to render the report entirely useless as a check upon each other. If the officer were dishonest and had misappropriated money, nothing would be easier for him than to make his reports agree with those of the depository who kept his funds. Every officer, honest or dishonest, knows the amount of funds to his credit, and it would require an amount of stupidity amounting to fatuity for a dishonest officer to report to the Treasurer an account to his credit larger than he knew would be reported by the depository with whom he kept his account.

For these reasons the Treasury soon ceased to place reliance on these reports as a means for the detection of fraud, and was not always prompt in requiring them to be made when officers failed to send them in. It owed us the light, the failure of the Treasurer to require reports from Col. HODGE is utterly immaterial so far as any responsibility for defalcation goes, since no scrutiny or comparison to which the Treasurer could subject them would reveal their dishonest character. The only way in which any discrepancies in his reports could have been detected, even if such reports been made, would have been by comparing them with his reports to the Pay-master-General; but inasmuch as the unappropriated checks were all drawn from his accounts with the Treasurer, discrepancies could have been just as easily discovered by an examination of the Treasurer's books by a Pay Department clerk, as by examining HODGE'S reports to the Treasurer. Hence the absence of the reports is a matter of no importance whatever. The most complete refutation of the allegation of the Pay Department is, however, furnished by the fact that for some time a gentleman connected with the Pay Department, who is not connected in the investigation of HODGE'S accounts, has been in the habit of calling upon the Treasurer's office for the balances reported to the credit of Pay-masters, and has in several instances, at his request, been furnished with statements of the balances held by the Treasurer to the credit of Col. HODGE. The books of the Treasurer have always been open to any citizen, or any which the Pay Department might choose to make. The attempt to use his letter of May 9, 1865, in the face of the foregoing facts, as a basis for holding Gen. STIMMER responsible for HODGE'S short-comings, is regarded as a cruel wrong on the absence of the Treasurer, and was prompted in writing it by a spirit of self-protection on the part of the Department, which had just lost heavily through the defalcation of HODGE'S old confrere, Major PAULDING, and who could have entertained no suspicion of the use to which it was to be perverted. The second allegation of the Pay Department is, it is claimed, quite as immaterial as the first. The Treasury officials say that although the circular of November 28, 1860, has not been literally complied with in the payment of HODGE'S checks, yet that had it been observed, it would have furnished no preventive of his peculations.

The circular does not, it is true, permit checks to be drawn in favor of Col. HODGE'S "order or bearer." It does, however, require that, except in certain specified cases, checks drawn by disbursing officers must be in favor of the person by name to whom payment is to be made, or in favor of such person by name or bearer. Had payment been refused on checks drawn payable to cash or bearer, it would have been perfectly feasible for HODGE under these regulations, to have drawn out funds for his dishonest transactions upon checks payable to any fictitious person and bearer. Suppose HODGE had drawn these fraudulent checks in this manner, and had presented them in person; the Treasury could not have refused payment under the rules. The fact that names of payees were fictitious, and were not those of persons entitled to receive money from the Government, could not have been known to the Treasurer, since he has no means of knowing whether a proper voucher for the checks drawn was in the hands of the check. Since, therefore, the enforcement of the regulations could not have prevented HODGE'S fraudulent operations, the failure to enforce them, like the failure to call upon [illegible] immaterial in fixing [illegible] for the money claim, with which apparent justice, that their functions are confined to the safe-keeping of moneys deposited, and to their payment on genuine and proper checks, and that they are in nowise responsible for ill-applied portions of funds which have been withdrawn from their custody by dishonest officers who render no accounts to them, and are not in the slightest degree under their control.

The Secretary of War has directed the Judge-Advocate-General to prefer charges against Major HODGE, Pay-master-General BOOTHBY, and Colonel DUNCAN, in connection with the conduct in the administration of his Department, in regard to HODGE'S delinquencies. Secretary BOUTWELL will shortly also proceed to examine the case.

The Secretary of War to-day notified the Treasury Department to proceed against the New-York bankers engaged with Pay-master HODGE in his late transactions in Wall street, that the Pay-master-General has a mass of evidence concerning the relations between the bankers and the Pay-master, which is at their disposal. The Secretary of War has not been applied to to release HODGE on bail, as he is a military prisoner, but he has been requested to release him from close confinement, which he refused to do. The case was yesterday referred to the Judge-Advocate-General, with instructions to prepare charges and specifications immediately. A court-martial for his trial will then be designated by the Secretary. There will be no court of inquiry in the case of Gen. BARCH'S administration of the Pay Department, as Gen. BARCH requested, the Secretary of War feeling satisfied that there have been no irregularities, and deeming it inexpedient, under such circumstances, to incur the expense of assembling such a court of inquiry.

TELEGRAPHIC BREVITIES.

At Wakefield, Va., on Friday, the second down freight-train ran over a negro boy aged fourteen years, completely severing one of his legs and horribly mangling the other. The boy had been tied on the track with ropes by his step-father to be whipped, and while the man was in the woods gathering switches, the train ran over the boy.

In the United States Circuit Court at Montgomery, Ala., Judge WOODS refused the appointments of a receiver on the application of W. F. DRAKE, a second mortgage bondholder of the Alabama and Chattanooga Railroad, on the ground that the State Courts have possession of the road and jurisdiction through receivers.

The several Commanderies of Knights Templar of Baltimore have perfected arrangements for the reception of their brethren at the Grand Triennial Conversation of Knights Templar of the United States, to be held in the Temple of Royal Arch Masons, which convenes on Monday.

A mammoth cheese, weighing 3,000 pounds, the product of one day's milking of 2,200 cows, yielding 30,106 pounds of milk, manufactured in Erie County, was deposited for exhibition in the International Industrial Exhibition, at Buffalo, last night.

WILLIAM H. KNAPP, Superintendent of the gravity railroad from Forest of Dean Iron Mines, Orange County, to Fort Montgomery, on the Hudson River, was instantly killed on Thursday by one of the cars running off the track.

At the First Assembly District Republican Convention of Niagara County, held in Lockport yesterday, RICHARD CROWLEY, BENJAMIN SPENCER, and LUTHER FORSYTHE were elected delegates to the State Convention.

The total receipt of silver bullion at Salt Lake City last week amounted to $58,000, of which $9,150 was from Piache, and $6,100 from Ophir. The whole amount has been forwarded East.

EDWARD FRASE, a freight conductor on the Vermont Central Railroad, while directing the transfer of cars to a side track in Concord, yesterday morning, fell in front of the engine and was killed.

JOSEPH SHAWHAN, the oldest farmer in Kentucky, and inventor of bourbon whisky, was thrown from his horse, Tuesday night, at Lexington, and died from his injuries yesterday afternoon.

Commissioner DOUGLASS has given instructions to the Collectors to forward to the Superintendents of their respective districts copies of certain of their monthly reports to the Internal Revenue Bureau.

CURRENT LITERATURE.

MY BIRTH-DAY.

Beneath the moonlight and the snow
Lies dead my latest year;
The Winter winds are wailing low
Its dirges in my ear.

I grieve not with the moaning wind
As if a loss befell;
Before me, even as behind,
God is, and all is well!

His light shines on me from above,
His low voice speaks within—
The patience of immortal love
Outwearying mortal sin.

Not mindless of the growing years
Of care and loss and pain,
My eyes are wet with thankful tears
For blessings which remain.

If dim the gold of life has grown,
I will not count it dross,
Nor turn from treasures still my own
To sigh for lack and loss.

The years no charm from nature take;
As sweet her voices call,
As beautiful her morning break,
As fair her evenings fall.

Love watches o'er my quiet ways,
Kind voices speak my name,
And lips that find it hard to praise
Are slow, at least, to blame.

How softly ebb the tides of will!
How fields, once lost or won,
Now lie behind me green and still,
Beneath a level sun!

How hushed the hiss of party hate,
The clamor of the throng!
How old, harsh voices of debate
Flow into rhythmic song!

Methinks the spirit's temper grows
Too set in this still air,
Somewhat the restful heart foregoes
Of needed watch and prayer.

The bark by tempest vainly tossed
May founder in the calm,
And he who braved the polar frost
Faint by the tales of balm.

Better than self-indulgent years,
The outflung fears of youth,
Than pleasant songs in idle ears
The tumult of the truth.

Rest for the weary hands is good,
And love for hearts that pine,
But lest the vanity habitude
Of upright souls be mine,

Let winds that blow from heaven refresh,
Dear Lord, the languid air;
And let the weakness of the flesh
Tby strength of spirit share.

And, if the eye must fail of light,
The ear forget to hear,
Make clearer still the spirit's sight,
More fine the inward ear!

Be near me in mine hours of need
To soothe, or cheer, or warn,
And own these slopes of sunset lead
As up the hills of morn!

KAWEAH'S RUN.

After trying hard to climb Mount Whitney without success, and having returned to the plains, I enjoyed my two days' rest in hot Visalia, where were fruits and people, and where I, at length thawed out the last traces of Alpine cold, and recovered from hard work and the sinful bread of my fortnight's campaign. I considered it happiness to spend my whole day on the quiet hotel veranda, accustoming myself again to such articles as chairs and newspapers, and watching with unexpected pleasure the few village girls who flitted about during the day, and actually found time after sunset to chat with, favored fellows beneath the wide oaks of the street-side. Especially interesting seemed the rustic sister of whom I bought figs at a garden gate, thinking her, as I did, comme il faut, though recollecting later that her gown was of forgotten mode, and that she carried a suggestion of ancient history in the obsolete style of her back hair. Everybody was of interest to me, not excepting the two Mexican mountaineers who monopolized the agent at Wells, Fargo & Co.'s office, causing me delay. They were transacting some little item of business, and stood loafing by the counter, mechanically jingling huge spurs and shrugging their shoulders as they chatted in a dull, sleepy way. At the door they paused, keeping up quite a lively dispute, without apparently noticing me as I drew a small bag of gold and put it in my pocket. There was no especial reason why I should remark the stolid, brutal cast of their countenances, as I thought them not worse than the average Californian grasser; but it occurred to me that one might as well guess at a geological formation as to attempt to judge the age of mountaineers, because they get very early in life a fixed expression; which is deepened by continual rough weathering and undisturbed accumulations of dirt. I observed them enough to see that the elder was a man of middle height, of wiry, light figure and thin hawk visage; a certain angular sharpness making itself noticeable about the shoulders and arms, which tapered to small, almost refined, hands. A mere fringe of perfectly straight black beard followed the curve of his chin, tangling itself at the ear with shaggy unkempt locks of hair. He wore an ordinary stiff-brimmed Spanish sombrero, and the inevitable greasy red sash performed the rather difficult task of holding together flannel shirt and buckskin breeches, besides half covering with its folds a long narrow knife.

His companion struck me as a half-breed Indian, somewhere about eighteen years of age, his beardless face showing deep brutal lines, and a mouth which was a mere crease between hideously heavy lips. Blood stained the rowels of his spurs; an old felt hat, crumpled and ragged, slouched forward over his eyes, doing its best to hide the man.

I thought them a hard couple, and summed up their traits as stolidity and utter cruelty.

I was pleased that the stableman who saddled Kaweah was unable to answer their inquiry as to where I was going, and annoyed when I heard the hotel-keeper inform them that I started that day for Millerton.

Leaving behind people and village, Kaweah bore me out under the grateful shade of oaks, among rambling settlements and fields of harvested grain, whose pale Naples-yellow stubble and stacks contrasted finely with the deep foliage, and served as a pretty groundwork for stripes of vivid green which marked the course of numberless irrigating streams. Low cottages, overarched with boughs and hemmed in with weed jungles, margined my road. I saw at the gate many children who looked me still of countenance with their serious, stupid stare; they were the least self-conscious of any human beings I have seen.

Trees and settlements and children were soon behind us, an open plain stretching on in front without visible limit—a plain slightly browned with the traces of dried herbaceous plants, and unrelieved by other object than distant processions of trees traced from some cañon gate of the Sierras westward across to the middle valley, or occasional bands of restless cattle marching obediently about in search of food. It was not pleasant to realize that I had 120 miles of this lonely sort of landscape ahead of me, nor that my only companion was Kaweah; for with all his splendid powers and rare qualities of instinct, there was not the slightest evidence of response or affection in his behavior. Friendly toleration was the highest gift he bestowed on me, though I think he had great personal enjoyment in my habits as a rider. The only moments that we ever seemed thoroughly en rapport were when I crowded him down to a wild run, using the spur and shouting at him loudly, or when in our friendly races homeward toward camp, through the forest, I put him at a leap where he even doubted his own power. At such times I could communicate ideas to him with absolute certainty. He would stop, or turn, or gather himself for a leap, at my will, as it seemed to me, by some sort of magnetic communication; but I always paid dearly for this in long, tiresome efforts to calm him.

With the long level road ahead of me, I dared not attack its monotony by any unusual riding, and having settled him at our regular traveling trot,—a gait of about six miles an hour,—I forgot all about the dreary expanse of plain, and gave myself up to quiet revery. About dusk we had reached the King's River Ferry.

An ugly, unpainted house, perched upon the bluff, and flanked by barns and out-buildings of disorderly aspect, overlooked the ferry. Not a sign of green vegetation could be seen, except certain half-dried willows standing knee-deep along the river's margin, and that dark pine gone lifted upon the Sierras in the eastern distance.

It is desperate punishment to stay through a Summer at one of these plain ranches, there to be beat upon by an unrelenting sun in the midst of a scorched landscape, and forced to breathe sirocco and sand; yet there are found plenty of people who are glad to become master of one of these ferries or stage stations, their life for the most part silent and as unvaried as its outlook, given over wholly to permanent and vacant loafing.

Supper was announced by a business-like youth, who came out upon the veranda and vigorously rung a tavern bell, although I was the only auditor, and likely enough, the only person within twenty miles.

I envy my horse at such times; the gramineverous have us at a disadvantage; for one revolts at the cuisine, although disliking to insult the house by quietly shying the food out the window. I arose hungry from the table, remembering that some eminent hygeist has averred that by so doing one has achieved sanitary success.

As I walked over to see Kaweah at the corral, I glanced down the river, and saw persistent a quarter of a mile below, two horsemen ride down our bank, spur their horses into the stream, swim to the other side, and struggle up a steep bank, disappearing among bunches of cotton-wood trees near the river.

So dangerous and unusual a proceeding could not have been to save the half-dollar ferriage. There was something about their seat, and the cruel way they drove home their spurs, that, in default of better reasons, made me think them Mexicans.

The whole Tulare plain is the home of nomadic ranchers, who, as pasturage changes, drive their herds of horses and cattle from range to range; and as the wolves prowl about for prey, so a class of Mexican highwaymen rob and murder the ranchers from one year's end to the other.

I judged the swimmers were bent on some such errand, and lay down on the ground by Kaweah to guard him, rolling myself in my soldier's great-coat, and slept with saddle for a pillow.

Once or twice the animal waked me up by stamping restively, but I could perceive no cause for alarm, and slept on comfortably until a little before sunrise, when I rose, took a plunge in the river, and hurriedly dressed myself for the day's ride. The ferryman who had promised to put me across the river at dawn was already at his post, and after permitting Kaweah to drink a deep draught, I rode him out on the ferry-boat, and was quickly at the other side.

The road for two or three miles ascends the right bank of the river, approaching in places quite closely to the edge of its bluffs. I greatly enjoyed my ride, watching the Sierra sky-line high and black against a golden circle of dawn, and seeing it mirrored faithfully in still reaches of river, and pleasing myself with the continually changing foreground, as group after group of tall, motionless cotton-woods were passed. The willows, too, are pleasing in their entire harmony with the scene, and the air they have of protecting bank and shore from torrent and sun. The plain stretched off to my left into dusky distance, and ahead, in a bare smooth expanse, dreary by its monotony, yet not altogether repulsive in the pearly obscurity of the morning. In midsummer these plains are as hot as the Sahara through the long blinding day; but after midnight there comes a delicious blandness upon the air, a suggestion of freshness and up-springing life, which renews vitality within you.

Kaweah showed the influence of this condition in the sensitive play of ears and toss of head, and in his free, spirited stride. I was experimenting on his sensitiveness to sounds, and had found that his ears turned back at the faintest whisper, when suddenly his head rose, he looked sharply forward toward a clump of trees on the river bank, 150 yards in front of us, where a quick glance revealed to me a camp-fire and two men hurrying saddles upon their horses—a gray and a sorrel.

They were Spaniards, the same who had swum King's River the afternoon before, and as it flashed on me finally the two whom I had studied so attentively at Visalia. Then I at once saw their purpose was to waylay me, and made up my mind to give them a lively run. The road followed the bank up to their camp in an easterly direction, and then, turning a sharp right angle to the north, led out upon the open plain, leaving the river finally.

I decided to strike across, and threw Kaweah into a sharp trot.

I glanced at my girth, and then at the bright copper upon my pistol, and settled myself firmly in the saddle.

Finding that they could not saddle quickly enough to attack me mounted, the older villain grabbed a shot-gun, and sprung out to head me off, his comrade meantime tightening the cinches.

I turned Kaweah further off to the left, and tossed him a little more rein, which he understood and sprung out into a gallop.

The robber brought his gun to his shoulder, covered me, and yelled in good English, "Hold on, you ——!" At that instant his companion dashed up leading the other horse. In another moment they were mounted, and after me, yelling, "Hu-hils" to the mustangs, plunging in the spurs, and shouting occasional volleys of oaths.

By this time I had regained the road, which lay before me traced over the black objectless plain in vanishing perspective. Fifteen miles lay between me and a station; Kaweah and pistol were my only defense, yet at that moment I felt a thrill of pleasure, a wild moment of inspiration, almost worth the danger to experience.

I glanced over my shoulder and found that the Spaniards were crowding their horses to the fullest speed; their heels rattling on the dry plain were accompanied by inarticulate noises like the cries of bloodhounds. Kaweah comprehended the situation. I could feel his grand legs gather under me, and the iron muscles contract with excitement; he tugged at the bit, shook his bridle-chains, and flung himself impatiently into the air.

It flashed upon me that perhaps they had confederates concealed in some ditch far in advance of me, and that the plan was to crowd me through at fullest speed, giving up the chase to new men and fresh horses; and I resolved to save Kaweah to the utmost, and only allow him a speed which should keep me out of gunshot. So I held him firmly, and reserved my spur for the last emergency. Still we fairly flew over the plain.

For the first twenty minutes the road was hard and smooth and level; after that gentle, shallow undulations began, and at last, at brief intervals, were sharp narrow arroyos (ditches eight or nine feet wide.) I reined Kaweah in, and brought him up sharply on their bottoms, giving him the bit to spring up on the other side; but he quickly taught me better, and gathering, took them easily, without my feeling it in his stride.

The hot sun had arisen. I saw with anxiety that the tremendous speed began to tell painfully on Kaweah. Foam tinged with blood fell from his mouth, and sweat rolled in streams from his whole body, and now and then he drew a deep-heaving breath. I leaned down and felt of the cinch to see if it had slipped forward, but, as I had saddled him with great care, it kept its true place, so I had only to fear the pressure behind or a new relay ahead. I was conscious of plenty of reserved speed in Kaweah, whose powerful run was already distancing their fatigued mustangs.

As we bounded down a roll of the plain a cloud of dust sprung from a ravine directly in front of me, and two black objects lifted themselves in the sand. I drew my pistol, cocked it, whirled Kaweah to the left, plunging by and clearing them by about six feet; a thrill of relief came as I saw the long white horns of Spanish cattle gleam above the dust.

Unconsciously I restrained Kaweah too much, and in a moment the Spaniards were crowding down upon me at a fearful rate. On they came, the crash of their spurs and the clatter of their horses' feet distinctly heard; and as I had so often compared the beats of chronometers, I unconsciously noted that while Kaweah's breath, although painful, came with regular power, the mustangs' respiration was quick, spasmodic and irregular. I compared the intervals of the two mustangs, and found that one breathed faster than the other, and then upon counting the best mustang with Kaweah, found that he breathed nine breaths to Kaweah's seven, in two or three minutes I tried it again, finding the relation ten to seven. Then I felt the victory, and I yelled to Kaweah. The thin ears shot back flat upon his neck; lower and lower he lay down to his run; I flung him a loose rein, and gave him a friendly pat on the withers. It was a glorious burst of speed. The wind rushed by and the plain swept under us with dizzying swiftness. I shouted again, and the thing of nervous life under me bounded on wilder and faster, till I could feel his spine thrill as with shocks from a battery. I managed to look round—delicate matter at speed—and saw, far behind, the distanced villains, both dismounted, and one horse fallen.

In an instant I drew Kaweah in to a gentle trot, looking around every moment, lest they should come on me unawares. In a half mile I reached the station, and I was cautiously greeted by a man who sat by the barn-door, with a rifle across his knees. He had seen me come over the plain, and had also seen the Spanish horse fall. Not knowing but he might be in league with the robbers, I gave him a careful glance before dismounting, and was completely reassured by an expression of terror which had possession of his countenance.

I sprung to the ground and threw off the saddle, and after a word or two with the man, who proved to be the sole occupant of this station, we fell to work together upon Kaweah, my cocked pistol and his rifle lying close at hand. We sponged the creature's mouth, and, throwing a sheet over him, walked him regularly up and down for about three-quarters of an hour, and then, taking him upon the open plain, where we could scan the horizon in all directions, gave him a thorough grooming. I never saw him look so magnificently as when we led him down to the creek to drink; his skin was like satin, and the veins of his head and neck stood out fine and round like whip-cords.

In the excitement of taking care of Kaweah I had scarcely paid any attention to my host; but after two hours, when the horse was quietly munching his hay, I listened attentively to his story.

The two Spaniards had lurked round his station during the night, guns in hand, and made an attempt to steal a pair of stage-horses from the stable; but as he had watched with his rifle, they finally rode away.

By his account I knew them to be my pursuers. They had here, however, ridden two black mustangs, and had doubtless changed their mount for the sole purpose of waylaying me.

About 11 o'clock, it being my turn to watch the horizon, I saw two horsemen making a long detour round the station, disappearing finally in the direction of Millerton. By my glass I could only make out that they were men riding in single file on a sorrel and a gray horse; but this, with the fact of the long detour which finally brought them back into the road again, convinced me that they were my enemies. The uncomfortable probability of their raising a band, and returning to make sure of my capture, filled me with disagreeable foreboding, and all day long, whether my turn at sentinel duty or not, I did little else than range my eye over the valley in all directions.

Twice during the day I led Kaweah out and paced him to and fro, for fear his tremendous exertion would cause a stiffening of the legs; but each time he followed close to my shoulder with the same firm, proud step, and I gloried in him.

Shortly after dark I determined to mount and push forward to Millerton, my friend, the station-man, having given me careful directions as to its position; and I drew from the topography of the country, that, by abandoning the road and traveling by the stars, I could not widely miss my mark; so about 9 o'clock I saddled up Kaweah, and, mounting, bade good-by to my friend.

The air was bland, the heavens cloudless and starlit; in the west a low arch of light out of which had faded the last traces of sunset color; in the east a silver dawn shone mild and pure above the Sierras, brightening as the light in the west faded, till at last one jetty crag was cut upon the dusk of rising moon.

Upon the light gray tone of the plain every object might be seen, and as I rode on the memory of danger passed away, leaving me in full enjoyment of companionship with the hour and with my friend Kaweah, whose sturdy, easy stride was in itself a delight. There is a charm peculiar to these soft, dewless nights. It seems the perfection of darkness, in which you get all the rest of sleep while riding, or lying wide awake on your blankets. Now and then an object, vague and unrecognized, loomed out of dusky distance, arresting our attention, for Kaweah's quick eye usually found them first; dead carcasses of starved cattle, a blanched skull, or stump of aged oak, were the only things seen, and we gradually got accustomed to these, passing with no more than a glance.

At last we approached a region of low rolling sand-hills, where Kaweah's tread became muffled, and the silence so oppressive that I was glad to arrive at the summit of the zone of hills, and looking out upon the wide, shallow valley of the San Joaquin, a plain dotted with groves and lighted here and there by open reaches of moonlit river.

I looked up and down, searching for lights which should mark Millerton. I had intended to strike the river above the settlement, and should now, if my reckoning was correct, be within half a mile of it.

Riding down to the river bank I dismounted, and allowed Kaweah to quench his thirst. The cool mountain water, fresh from the snow, was delicious to him. He drank, stepped to breathe, and drank again and again. I allowed him also to feed a half-moment on the grass by the river bank, and then remounting headed down the river, and rode slowly along under the shadow of trees, following a broad, well-beaten trail which led, as I believed, to the village.

While in a grove of oaks, jingling spurs suddenly sounded ahead, and directly I heard voices. I quickly turned Kaweah from the trail, and tied him a few rods off, behind a thicket, then crawled back into a bunch of buckeye bushes, disturbing some small birds, which took flight. In a moment two horsemen, talking Spanish heard, and as they passed I recognized their horses and then the men. The impulse to try a shot was so strong that I got out my revolver, but upon second thought put it up. As they rode on into the shadow, the younger, as I judged by his voice, broke out in a delicious melody—one of those passionate Spanish songs with a peculiar throbbing cadence, which he emphasized by sharply ringing his spurs.

These Californian scoundrels are invariably light-hearted; crime cannot overshadow the exhilaration of out-door life, remorse and gloom are banished like clouds before this perennially sunny climate.

As the soft fu.l tones of my bandit died in distance, I went for Kaweah, and rode rapidly westward in the opposite direction, bringing up soon in the outskirts of Millerton, just as the last gamblers were closing up their little games, and about the time the drunk were conveying one another home. Kaweah being stabled, I went to the hotel, an excellent and orderly establishment, where a colored man of mild manners gave me supper and made me at home by gentle conversation, promising at last to wake me early, and bidding me good night at my room door with the tones of an old friend. I think his soothing spirit may partly account for the genuinely profound sleep into which I quickly fell, and which held me fast bound until his hand on my shoulder and "half-past four, Sir," called me back, and renewed the currents of consciousness.

After we had had our breakfast, Kaweah and I forded the San Joaquin, and I at once left the road, determined to follow a mountain trail which led toward Mariposa. The trail proved a good one to travel, of smooth, soft surface, and pleasant in its diversity of up and downs, and with rambling curves which led through open regions of brown hills, whose fern and grass were ripened to a common yellow-brown, then among the park-like slopes, crowned with fine oaks, and occasional pine woods, the ground frequently covering itself with clumps of such shrubs as chaparral, and the never-enough-admired manzanita. Yet I think I never saw such facilities for an ambuscade. I imagined the path went out of its way to thread every thicket, and the very trees grouped themselves with a view to highway robbery.

I soon, though, got tired looking out for my Spaniards, and became assured of having my ride to myself when I studied the trail, and found that Kaweah's were the first tracks of the day.

Riding thus in the late Summer along the Sierra foot-hills, one is constantly impressed with the climatic peculiarities of the region. With us in the East, plant life seems to continue until it is at last put out by cold, the trees appear to grow till the first frosts; but in the Sierra foot-hills growth and active life culminate in June and early July, and then follow long months of warm, stormless Autumn, whereas the hills grow slowly browner, and the whole air seems to ripen into a fascinating repose, a rich, dreamy quiet, with distance lost behind pearly hazes, with warm tranquil nights, dewless and silent. This period is opulent in yellows and russets and browns, in great overhanging masses of oak, whose olive hue is warmed into umber depth, in groves of serious pines, red of bark, and cool in the dark greenness of their spires. Nature wears an aspect of patient waiting for a great change; ripeness, existence beyond the accomplishment of the purpose of life, a long, pleasant, painless waiting for death—these are the conditions of the vegetation; and it is vegetation more than the peculiar appearance of the air which impresses the strange character of the season. It is as if our August should grow rich and ripe, through cloudless days and glorious warm nights, on till February, and then wake as from sleep, to break out in the bloom of May.

I was delighted to ride thus alone and expose myself, as one uncovers a sensitised photographic plate, to be influenced, for this is a respite from scientific work, when through months you hold yourself accountable for seeing everything, for analyzing, for instituting perpetual comparison, and as it were sharing in the administering of the physical world. No tongue can tell the relief to simply withdraw scientific observation, and let nature impress you in the dear old way with all her mystery and glory, with those vague, indescribable emotions which tremble between wonder and sympathy.

Behind me in distance stretched the sere plain where Kaweah's run saved me. To the west, fading out into warm blank distance, lay the great valley of San Joaquin, into which, descending by sinking curves, were rounded hills, with sunny brown slopes softened as to detail by a low clinging bank of multy air. Now and then out of the haze to the east indistinct rosy peaks with dull silvery snow-marblings, stood dimly up against the sky, and higher yet a few sharp summits lifted into the clearer heights seemed lumo there floating. Quite in harmony with this was the little group of Dutch settlements I passed, where an antique-looking man and woman sat together on a veranda sunning their white hair, and silently smoking old porcelain pipes.

Nor was there any element of incongruity at the rancheria, where I dismounted to rest shortly after noon. A few sleepy Indians lay on their backs dreaming; the good-humored stout squaws, nursing pappooses, or lying outstretched upon red blankets. The agreeable harmony was not alone from the Indian Summer in their blood, but in part as well from the features of their dress and facial expression. Their clothes, of Caucasian origin, quickly fade out into utter barbarism, toning down to warm dirty umbers, never failing to be relieved, here and there, by ropes of blue and white beads, or head-band and girdle of scarlet cloth. I saw one woman, a splendid mold, soundly sleeping upon her back, a blanket covering her from the waist down in simple folds, her bare body and large, full breasts modelled into bronze under streaming light, the arms flung out wide and relaxed, the lips closed with grave compression, and about the eyes and full throat an air of deep, eternal sleep. She might have been a casting in metal, but for the rich, hot color in her lips and cheeks.

Toward the late afternoon, trotting down a gentle forest slope, I came in sight of a number of ranche buildings grouped about a central open space. A small stream flowed by the out-buildings, and wound among chaparral-covered spurs below. Considerable crops of grain had been gathered into a corral, and a number of horses were quietly straying about. Yet with all the evidences of considerable occupations, the whole place had an air of suspicious mock-repose. Riding into the open square, I saw that one of the buildings was a store, and to this I rode, tying Kaweah to the piazza post.

I thought the whole world slumbered when I beheld the sole occupant of this country store, a red-faced man in pantaloons and shirt, who lay on his back upon a counter fast asleep, the handle of a revolver grasped in his right hand. It seemed to me if I were to wake him up a little too suddenly he might misunderstand my presence and do some accidental damage; so I stepped back and poked Kaweah, making him jump and clatter his hoofs, and at once the proprietor sprung to the door, looking flustered and uneasy.

I asked him if he could accommodate me for the afternoon and night, and take care of my horse; to which he replied, in a very leisurely manner, that there was a bed, and something to eat, and hay, and that if I was inclined to take the chances, I might stay.

Being in mind to take the chances, I did stay, and my host walked out with me to the corral, and showed me where to get Kaweah's hay and grain.

I loafed about for an hour or two, finding that a Chinese cook was the only other human being in sight, and then concluded to pump the landlord. A half-hour's trial thoroughly disgusted me, and I gave it up as a bad job. I did, however, learn that he was a man of Southern birth, of considerable education, which a brutal life and depraved mind had not suffced fully to obliterate. He seemed to care very little for his business, which indeed was small enough, for during the time I spent there not a single customer made his appearance. The stock of goods I observed on examination to be chiefly fire-arms, every manner of gambling apparatus and liquors; the few pieces of stuffs, barrels, and boxes of groceries appeared to be disposed rather as ornament than for actual sale.

From each of the man's trousers pockets protruded the handle of a Derringer, and behind his counter were arranged in convenient position two or three double-barreled shot-guns.

I remarked to him that he seemed to have a handily-arranged arsenal, at which he regarded me with a cool, quiet stare, polished the handle of one of his Derringers upon his trousers, examined the percussion-cap with great deliberation, and then with a nod of the head, intended to convey great force, said, "You don't live in these parts,"—a fact for which I felt not unthankful.

The man drank brandy freely and often, and at intervals of about half an hour called to his side a plethoric old cat named "Gospel," stroked her with nervous rapidity, swearing at the same time in so distrait and unconscious a manner that he seemed mechanically talking to himself.

Whoever has traveled on the West Coast has not failed to notice the fearful volleys of oaths which the oxen-drivers hurl at their teams, but for ingenious flights of fancy profanity I have never met the equal of my host. With the most perfect good nature and unmoved countenance he uttered florid blasphemies, which, I think, must have taken hours to invent. I was glad when bedtime came, to be relieved of his presence, and especially pleased when he took me to the little separate building, in which was a narrow single bed. Next this building on the left was the cook-house and dining-room, and upon the right lay his own sleeping apartment. Directly across the square, and not more than sixty feet off, was the gate of the corral, which, when moved, creaked on its rusty hinges in the most dismal manner.

As I lay upon my bed I could hear Kaweah occasionally stamp; the snoring of the Chinaman on one side, and the low, mumbled conversation of my host and his squaw on the other. I felt no inclination to sleep, but lay there in half doze, quite conscious, yet withdrawn from the present.

I think it must have been about 11 o'clock when I heard the clatter of a couple of horsemen, who galloped up to my host's building and sprang to the ground, their Spanish spurs ringing on the stone. I sat up in bed, grasped my pistol, and listened. The peach-tree next my window rustled. The horses moved about so restlessly that I heard but little of the conversation, but that little I found of personal interest to myself.

I give, as nearly as I can remember, the fragments of dialogue between my host and the men, whom I recognized as the elder of my two robbers:

"When did he come?"

"Well, the sun might have been about four hours."

"Has his horse give out?"

I failed to hear the answer, but was tempted to shout out, "No!"

"Gray coat, buckskin breeches." (My dress.)

"Going to Mariposa at 7 in the morning."

"I guess I wouldn't, round here."

A low, muttered soliloquy in Spanish wound up with a growl.

"No, Antone, not within a mile of the place."

"Sta buen'."

Out of the compressed jumble of the final sentence I got but the one word, "buckshot."

The Spaniards mounted, and the sound of their spurs and horses' hoofs soon died away in the north, and I lay for half an hour revolving all sorts of plans. The safest course seemed to be to slip out in the darkness, and fly on foot to the mountains, abandoning my good Kaweah; but I thought of his noble run, and it seemed to me so wrong to turn my back on him, that I resolved to unite our fate. I rose cautiously, and, holding my watch up to the moon, found that twelve o'clock had just passed, then taking from my pocket a five-dollar gold piece, I laid it upon the stand by my bed, and in my stocking-feet, with my clothes in my hands, started noiselessly for the corral. A fierce bull-dog, who had shown no disposition to make friends with me, bounded from the open door of the proprietor to my side. Instead of tearing me, as I had expected, he licked my hands and fawned about my feet.

Reaching the corral gate, I dreaded opening it, as once, remembering the rusty hinges, so I hung my clothes upon an upper bar of the fence, and, cautiously lifting the latch, began to push back the gate inch by inch, an operation which required me eight or ten minutes; then I walked up to Kaweah and patted him. His manger was empty; he had picked up the last kernel of barley. The creature's manner was full of curiosity, as if he had never been approached in the night before. Suppressing his ordinary whinnying, he preserved a motionless, statue-like silence. I was in terror lest by snuffing or some nervous movement, he should waken the sleeping proprietor and expose my plan.

The corral and the open square were half covered with loose stones, and when I thought of the clatter of Kaweah's shoes I experienced a feeling of trouble, and again meditated running off on foot, until the idea struck me of muffling the iron feet. Ordinarily Kaweah would not allow me to lift his fore-feet at all. The two blacksmiths who shod him had done so at the peril of their lives, and whenever I had attempted to pick up his hind feet he had warned me away by dangerous stamps; so I approached him very timidly, and was surprised to find that he allowed me to lift all four of his feet without the slightest objection. As I stooped down he nosed me over, and nibbled playfully at my hat. In constant dread lest he should make some noise, I hurried to muffle his fore feet with my trousers and shirt, and then with rather more care, tie up on his hind feet my coat and drawers.

Knowing nothing of the country ahead of me, and fearing that I might again have to run for it, I determined to lead Kaweah to water him. Groping about the corral and barn, and at last finding a bucket, and descending through the darkness to the stream, I brought him a full draught, which he swallowed eagerly, when I tied my shoes on the saddle-pommel, and led the horse slowly out of the corral gate, holding him firmly by the bit, and feeling his nervous breath pour out upon my hand.

When we had walked perhaps a quarter of a mile, I stopped and listened. All was quiet, the landscape lying bright and distinct in full moonlight. I unbound the wrappings, shook from them as much dust as possible, dressed myself, and then mounting, started northward on the Mariposa trail with cooked pistol.

In the soft dust we traveled noiselessly for a mile or so, passing from open country into groves of oak and thickets of chaparral.

Without warning I suddenly came upon a smouldering fire close by the trail, and in the shadow descried two sleeping forms, one stretched on his back snoring heavily, the other lying upon his face, pillowing his head upon folded arms.

I held my pistol aimed at one of the wretches, and rode by without wakening them, guiding Kaweah in the thickest dust.

He keyed me up to a high pitch. I turned round in the saddle leaving Kaweah to follow the trail, and kept my eyes riveted on the sleeping forms, until they were lost in distance, and then I felt safe.

We galloped over many miles of trail, enjoying a sunrise, and came at last to Mariposa, where I deposited my gold, and then went to bed and made up my lost sleep.—Clarence King, Atlantic Monthly for October.

THE ART OF CONVERSATION.—In this century, the palm for humor may be unhesitatingly awarded to SYDNEY SMITH. The names of DOUGLAS JERROLD, THEODORE HOOK, and SERJEANT MURPHY may be picked out of a long roll of wits who have passed away within the last twenty years. It may be roughly stated that none of their survivors and successors have reached their fame. Countless is the tale of eminent men who emit occasional flashes; but we look in vain for the recognition of such steady streams of brilliance as those with which the heroes of the past were wont to enliven discourse. The stress laid upon this fact is almost enough to account for the opinion that we are actually degenerate as to colloquial vigor—an idea which may easily be pushed too far. As to the more popular qualities, there may be myriads of inglorious Yoricks, who shine with the clearest and brightest effulgence in their comparatively humble sphere, without having attained to a club reputation, or having been admitted to the best circles of society—which are the two most obvious methods of attracting public attention. Indeed, the world of fashion does not offer the same encouragement to good talking that was extended in bygone times. The exclusiveness which has grown up with the rapid accumulation of large fortunes by the mercantile and manufacturing classes, has doubtless something to do with this state of things. Great social barriers are broken down, but hurdles are stuck up all over the fold. But the great, and, unfortunately popular mistake—we had almost said crime—of overcrowding rooms, whereby the possibilities of good conversation are reduced to a minimum, and the multiplication of social duties to such an extent as hardly to have time or strength for social pleasures, is chiefly responsible for the change.

A lack of renowned masters of conversation seems more serious than ever, when we recollect that men of established fame exercise, through their immediate associates, imitators and admirers, an incalculable amount of stimulus, over widening in range, over the generality, far in advance of the aggregate influence of less distinguished individuals of equal talent. Still, even granting that the wit and humor of the present is to be unfavorably compared with that of the past, it is to be remembered that these are only two factors of an extremely variable and complex compound; and it is next door to impossible to deny that the loss in one direction has been compensated by gain in others. The increase of earnestness, to which we have before alluded, and the advance and spread of useful and interesting information, would tend to neutralize the supposed disturbance of balance.—Once a Week.

AN ENGLISH CRITIC ON AMERICAN WATERING-PLACES.—Taking the watering-places as a whole, it cannot be said that the Americans enjoy themselves when they go off for their summer holiday, or if they do, it is certainly in the most languid and phlegmatic manner. They seldom bathe, and when they do manage to shake off their vis inertiæ so as to effect that object, they are glad in the fashion that you see at Biarritz and the German baths. The ladies, of course, look nice and coquettish in their neatly-braided tunics and wide Zouave trowsers; but they will wear the most horrible-looking, wide-flapping, battered straw hats, instead of the neat head-dresses a French woman or a Teuton girl adopts; and the result is ugliness; for I defy even Venus herself to look piquante in a muleteer's sombrero. And for the men: a fat Gaul looks an absurd object enough in the costume of the bath, but substitute a very lean gentleman from Boston—and they are very spare in the matter of flesh, although great in bones—and it cannot be said that the change is for the better. Talking of the ladies, poor HALEVY, the poet of the war, wrote some very beautiful lines on seeing his lady-love emerge from a dip in the sea, which I have never seen in print over here. They ran slightly enough, but contain some very neat word-painting. There is a dullness about the sea-side life of cousin Jonathan which is very wearisome, after a time, to any one accustomed to the life of the continental and English watering-places; and it is surprising that such should be the case, when Young America is so wonderfully active and enterprising in business-matters. I suppose, however, it results from the undue speed at which he lives during the Winter, which so prostrates him that he is incapable of exertion during his leisure moments, and must experience a sort of Summer hibernation—to make a fine Irish bull. But the fact is there; day after day those at Newport and Long Branch go through a dull routine which would drive a muscular Christian into a state of frenzy. They do not walk, they will not boat; croquet is unheard of; cricket would not be attempted for worlds; in fact, they do nothing. After mowing up of the breakfasting table, the ladies betake themselves to their bedrooms until dinner, and the men-folk lounge on rocking chairs in the verandah, where they chew and expectorate, and read the latest New-York papers they can get hold of, and hardly ever look at the sea before them. After dinner, which generally takes place at 3 or 4 o'clock, they rouse up somewhat, and perhaps take a promenade for a few hundred yards; and after supper they have a dance or ball in the principal room of the hotel, where they saunter through the "German," a species of minuet, and then go wearily to bed. Occasionally they have a trotting-match, got up by some shrewd speculator from down East or Gotham City, and sometimes they drive out; but these are rare breaks in the listless monotony of their stay. I am not exaggerating one particle; any one who has stopped at the principal watering-places in America will corroborate my words. The ladies think of nothing but dressing in the latest finery, and have not the energy even to go out and show themselves off; and the men neither think of nor do anything. The arrival of the yachts at Newport creates a diversion for a short time, but at Long branch it is the same always, as long as the Summer season lasts. What they would do without their sumptuous hotels often puzzled me; but perhaps they would be more active and set on better, as there is no doubt the fact of having everything to one's hands ready, without any personal exertion, superinduces indolence.—Belgravia.

SOME WORDS ABOUT SIR WALTER SCOTT.—Ivanhoe and Kenilworth and Quentin Durward and the rest are, of course, bare blank impossibilities. No such people ever lived and talked on this planet; fragments of genuine history and fragments of genuine character may be imbedded in the plaster of Paris, but there is no solidity or permanence in the workmanship. The love of these conventional heroes unluckily sank very deeply into SCOTT'S mind. His puritans are generally better than his cavaliers, though he loved the cavaliers best in theory, just so far as in the puritans he was really painting from the life around him, and only transporting modern Scotchmen into antiquated surroundings. The evil extends beyond the purely historical romances. SCOTT for example, invented the modern Highlander. It is to him more than to anybody else that we owe the strange perversion facts of which induces a good Lowland Scot to fancy himself more nearly allied to the semi-barbarous wearers of the tartan than to his English blood relations. This fashion of talking twaddle about claymores and targets, and kilts reached its height, as MACAULAY remarks, in the marvelous performances of our venerated ruler, GEORGE IV. That monarch, he observes, "thought that he could not give a more striking proof of his respect for the usages which had prevailed in Scotland before the Union than by disguising himself in what, before the Union, was considered by nine Scotchman out of ten as the dress of a thief." The passage recalls one of the most tragic-comic passages in SCOTT'S life. When we think of the great poet appropriating the wine-glass in which his sacred Majesty had drunk his first draught in Scotland, and carelessly sitting down upon it afterward, we can only say, in the words of POPE:

Who would not laugh if such a man there be!
Who would not weep if—Waverley—were he!

That the sturdiest piece of manhood in the British Islands should lower himself to that wretched but of mock loyalty amounts almost to a national misfortune. The same might be illustrated by a picture at one of the interesting portrait exhibitions. There, in South Kensington, was hung up for the admiration of all men, a representation of GEORGE IV., which it was simply impossible to contemplate without exploding in a laugh. It portrayed a stalwart Highlander in full costume, some seven or eight feet high, as far as could be judged, and with the most tremendous muscular development. Above its shoulders rose a black cylindrical column, which was, in fact, the stock with which our ancestors used to encourage an attack of apoplexy. Above this again appeared the red puffy cheeks of the first gentleman in Europe, suggestive of innumerable bottles of port and burgundy at Carlton House. And the whole structure was surmounted by a bonnet with waving plumes. Anything more grotesque and more significant of the taste of the epoch could hardly be invented. And SCOTT was chiefly responsible for disguising that elderly London debauchee in the costume of a wild Gaelic cattle-lifter. And these scenes resemble nothing so much as the mock-heroic of the gross absurdity. We are told that an air of burlesque was thrown over the proceedings at Holyrood by the apparition of a true London Alderman in the same costume as his master. We could almost hope that by some strange blunder WILKIE had painted the Alderman instead of the Monarch. Alas! the evidence is too strong; and such as we have seen was the earthy idol before whom SCOTT delighted to bow his manly head. Let us pass by with a passing lamentation that so great and good a man should have encouraged the miserable British tendency for explaining unselfish loyalty by gross snobbishness, and first with the staminaless frivolity of the second, and blending both in the horrible grease of the last. Result: Indigeste, moles and a dyspeptic chaos.—Belgravia.

OUR POOR RELATIONS.

The Chimpanzee, which inhabits the great forests of Western Africa, is generally considered to approach nearest to man in his general appearance. When full grown, it is about five feet in height, standing erect; but it does not naturally prefer this posture, and when on the ground it usually walks upon all-fours, applying the outside of its hinder feet and the knuckles of its fore-limbs to the earth. The skin is clothed with long, coarse, black or dark brown hair, that becomes scanty on the lower part of the body and on the limbs; the face, which is of flesh color, is naked, and at each side there is a great tuft of long hair hanging down like a whisker. The chimpanzee lives in trees, upon the branches of which it is very active; and it has sufficient intelligence to build itself a kind of hut of the branches, usually about thirty or forty feet from the ground. Its food consists chiefly of fruits; and it is said to fly from the pursuit of man.

Young chimpanzees have frequently been brought to this country, and exhibited in the gardens of the Zoological Society. They are generally gentle, and have rather a melancholy appearance, often showing much affection for their keepers. BUFFON gives an interesting account of a young chimpanzee which was exhibited in France. "I have seen this animal," he says, "present its hand to the company, walk about with them gravely as if it belonged to the company, have seen it seat itself at table, unfold its napkin, wipe its lips, use its knife and fork to carry the food to its mouth, pour its drink into a glass, and touch glasses when invited; fetch a cup and saucer to the table, put in sugar, pour out its tea, and leave it to cool before drinking it; and all this without any other instigation than the signs and words of its master, and often of its own accord." BUFFON adds that "it was excessively fond of sugar plums."

In the Autumn of 1835 a young brown chimpanzee was exhibited in WOMBWELL'S menagerie at Scarborough, which had been captured in the sunny regions of Africa. To this amusing young creature Mr. WATERTON paid four long visits. It was called Jenny, and when kindly treated it was all gentleness. Still at times there was a slight tinge of mischief in her temper; for there was a pretty little dog in the same room with her, and whenever she could get hold of it she would fix her teeth in it, until it yelped and howled. When Mr. WATERTON paid his last visit to Jenny, she put her arms around his neck, looked wistfully at him, and, shaking her head, seemed to say, "There is nothing here to suit me. The little room is far too hot; the clothes which they force me to wear are quite inappropriate; while the food which they give me to eat is not like that upon which I used to feed, when I was healthy and free in my own native woods." Jenny did not long survive this visit. She soon fell sick and breathed her last. She was then sent to Walton Hall and was preserved by Mr. WATERTON in his most unrivaled and successful manner, no pains being spared to make the cherished favorite appear to some yet to come as though the cruel hand of death had never laid it low.

The gorilla has been discovered within the last few years inhabiting the same region as the chimpanzee, and it is in some respects considered to possess even a stronger resemblance to man. Though it is said to attain a height of seven feet, the largest specimens hitherto obtained have been less than six feet high. The gorilla is said by some travelers to walk upright, with its hands resting on the nape of its neck; but the state of the knuckles of those which have been captured shows that, like the chimpanzee, it usually goes on all fours. The body is covered with short grizzled hair, and the naked skin of the face and hands is black. The gorilla is much dreaded by the negroes who have to pass through the forests frequented by it, when hunting the elephant. This is not on account of its teeth, although they are very formidable, but of the enormous strength of its hands, with which it can easily strangle a man. It is even said that when the hunters are passing through the forest, one of their number will sometimes suddenly disappear, being caught up by a gorilla lurking on the lower branches of a tree; the victim is speedily strangled, and then the gorilla lets the body fall.

The magot, or Barbary ape, inhabits the northern parts of Africa, and it is also found on the rock of Gibraltar, through it is difficult to account for its presence in the latter peculiar locality. At some former period man may have conveyed a few of the African apes to the rock of Gibraltar, and left them there to propagate their kind; but it does not appear that there is any record to show that this establishment of an apish colony had ever taken place, though curiosity has often been on the alert to discover how this ape found it way to the rock, and by what means it has managed to protect and support itself in a locality so devoid of forest, and so exposed to the rush of commerce and the roar of cannon. At present the ape of Gibraltar is a prisoner at large just as far as the rock extends.

CAMPBELL relates a laughable anecdote of one of these apes, which he brought up home, and which became so attached to him as to be desirous of accompanying him wherever he went, so that when he had to perform divine service, he was under the necessity of shutting the ape up. One day, however, the animal escaped and followed his master, remaining perfectly quiet until the sermon began. It then crept forward, and overlooking the preacher, imitated his gestures so grotesquely that the whole congregation were convulsed with laughter. CAMPBELL, surprised and displeased at this ill-timed levity, reproved his auditors for their inattention; and on the obvious failure of his reproof, he, in the warmth of zeal, redoubled his gesticulations and vociferations. These the ape so exactly imitated, that all respect for their pastor was swallowed up in the scene before them, and the whole congregation burst into a loud and continuous roar of laughter. A friend of the preacher at length stepped up to him, and, on learning the cause of his hilarity, it was with the utmost difficulty that he could command a serious countenance while he ordered the ape to be taken away.—Cassell's Magazine.

IRISH POPLIN.—Beyond doubt there are few materials so thoroughly becoming to a woman as Irish poplin. It falls in soft massive folds, and has no disagreeable rustle; but rather that soft free-free about which the French novelist goes into raptures when he describes the gracious movements of his heroine. The brilliant colors are varied and numerous as the tints on a painter's palette, and afford a choice of hues so extended that every complexion may find its most becoming color. There are tender Spring-like greens for the too florid cheek of the matron, turquoise blue for the rose bloom of girlhood, delicious French grays and pearly shades of every degree for the bride of mature years, or the young bride's mother, and a sliding scale of the rubies, amethysts, and mazzons which are just now so fashionable; while for those who desire to exhibit their loyalty or nationality, there are tartans of every color in the economy of the fabric it is almost needless to speak. It is alike on both sides, has none of that "up and down" about which dressmakers complain when making-up figured silks, and will look bright to the last hour of its wear. For the interests of the manufacturers, Irish Poplins were too well; they outlast every other material used for ladies' dresses, and are a real boon to the economic.—Belgravia.

HAWTHORNE AND HIS SCARLET LETTER.—During the whole Winter when the Scarlet Letter was being written he seemed depressed and anxious. "There was a knot in his forehead all the time," Mrs. HAWTHORNE said, but she thought it was from some pecuniary anxiety, such as sometimes affected that little household. One evening he came to her and said that he had written something which he wished to read aloud; it was worth very little, but as it was finished, he might as well read it. He read aloud all that evening; but as the romance was left unfinished when they went to bed, not a word was then said about it on either side. He always disliked, she said, to have anything criticised until the whole had been read. He read a second evening, and the concentrated excitement had grown so great that she could scarcely bear it. At last it grew unendurable; and in the midst of the scene, near the end of the book, where Arthur Dimmesdale meets Hester and her child in the forest, Mrs. Hawthorne fell from her low stool upon the floor, pressed her hands upon her eyes, and said she could hear no more. Hawthorne put down the manuscript and looked at her in perfect amusement. "Do you really feel it so much?" he said; "then there must be something in it." He prevailed on her to rise and to hear the few remaining chapters of the romance. To those who knew Mrs. Hawthorne's impressible nature, this reminiscence of hers will have no tinge of exaggeration, but will appear very characteristic; she had borne to the utmost the strain upon her emotions before yielding. The next day, she said, the manuscripts was delivered to Mr. FIELDS, and the next morning he appeared early at the door, and on being admitted, caught up her boy in his arms saying, "You splendid little fellow, do you know what a father you have?" Then he ran up stairs to HAWTHORNE'S study, telling her as he went, that he (and I think, Mr. Whittier) had sat up all night to read it, and had come to Salem as early as possible in the morning. She did not go up stairs, but soon her husband came down, with fire in his eyes, and walked about the room, a different man. I have hesitated whether to print this brief narrative. Yet everything which illustrates the creation of a great literary work belongs to the world. How it would delight us all if the Shakespeare Societies were to bring to light a description like this of the very first reading of "Macbeth" or of "Hamlet!" To me it is somewhat the same thing to have got so near to the birth-hour of the Scarlet Letter.—T. W. Higginson.

SPIRIT OF RELIGIOUS PRESS.

The editor of the Christian Union thinks that there is a lack of consistency in the denunciations of gambling by most Christians. He says:

"In our own country, though time was when the best men took active part in lotteries for benevolent objects, and though colleges, hospitals, and even churches, have been founded and fostered by this means, common consent has now for many years condemned and outlawed them as directly productive of more poverty, crime and wretchedness than they could possibly in other ways alleviate. Acting upon this acknowledged state of facts, the laws repressing all these embodiments of the one natural principle are still kept in operation, and every now and then the most furious Police raids are made upon the faro-tables, the Keno-dens and the policy-shops, to the immense gratification of the few soothing souls who still survive to enjoy these melancholy burlesques upon vigorous government. Yet the habits and customs of the people are every day giving the lie to the laws upon the statute book. Look on the street corner; see how fearlessly he spreads his pet for the unwary, and corrupts the morals of the youth of the City, unmolested by the policeman who lounges opposite, and who was, as likely as not, one of the heroes of last night's glorious crusade against the gamblers! And why should we interfere with the peaceful spider who weaves his fly in the web under his very nose? Do not our newspapers seem with advertisements of gift enterprises in every form? Are not great lotteries every day proclaimed as the means of founding all manner of charities? Half the business of Wall-street is at anything else than betting on the events of the day. Is there a valid distinction between the notorious wages that are made behind the green tables in the mysterious palaces of Twenty——th-street, and those which are openly avowed at all the race-courses, ball-plays and regattas in the land? Nay, the Church herself, does she not sometimes directly give her approval to this practice? And what is the raffle and bazaar-craze, and all the pestiferous paraphernalia of little devilries which infest her charity fairs are deprecated as tending to evil, does she not too often resent the interference as proceeding from a narrow and over-scrupulous spirit? Let us no longer be guilty of this great inconsistency. Let us cease to make this puritanical meddling, to throw obstacles in the way of honest business. If gambling is a good thing, let us stop our hypocritical and impertinent pretense of denouncing it, and making laws against it, and 'coming down upon it.' If lotteries are a legitimate means of bettering our fortunes, and of building up of kingdom of righteousness, let us all save a hand in them—the more the merrier. We speak for fair play all round. We will have no more double-dealing. The ingenuous policemen of New-York shall no longer be subjected to the painful necessity of winking with one eye while they frown with the other on the enterprising Keno-people, who, in their turn, must no more be put to the inconvenience of breaking up their establishments one night, merely to open them again the next. The Wools and the Morgans shall wear them honorable prefixes without incurring the mockery and take their proper place among the benefactors of mankind; and the pulpit, its petty ethics no longer in conflict with the liberality of the committee-room, shall proclaim that unforetold millennium, when the Gospel trump shall be merely the 'best card in the pack,' and fighting the tiger be all the same as 'lying down with the lamb.'"

The Liberal Christian expresses its just indignation in the following manner, at the suppression of a correspondent that it associates itself with the "free love" movement:

"As to 'free love,' we reckon it in with the other crimes against chastity and purity. It is not a question upon which truly Christian and religious journals have any arguments to offer. We do not consider our readers in need of any counsel against the crimes of murder, shop-lifting and lying. Doubtless some of them may commit these offenses; but none of them are likely to justify, or to be guilty of them publicly from ignorance. We do not suppose our constituents to be in any doubt whether marriage is a religious and social sacrament. We assume that they hate and despise all the utterances of free lovers, and we can think of nothing but harm coming from the reopening of questions long settled by the slanderous voices of irresponsibleness. The imputation that liberal Christians have any sympathy with, or any excuse to offer for, 'free lovers' is just as base as that they favor murder or lying. We should be shocked to find that our people, as a whole, were not more scrupulous observers of marriage vows than any other, or than the ruffian element of our large cities. Not more rigid and severe in its condemnation of moral laxity and physical incontinence than any other class of Christians. We are glad to be held to this standard. Morality has been our reproach among other christian sects. Let us deserve it! We have only detestation and abhorrence for the efforts to overthrow the institutement of the country, into any collusion with, or leniency of feeling on, the subject of loose opinions in the relations of the sexes. One of the most plausible plans is to visit the offenses of women as lightly as the offenses of men—a very different thing from visiting the offenses of men as severely as those of women. With that plan we cannot have a most cordial sympathy. Let us keep all papers and essays in defense of, or in sympathy with, 'free love' where we keep our sewers and swill-galls—out of sight and as much as possible out of mind. Let us privately defeminate them, and make them as little danger-ous as possible; but not bring them into the open air, or even conveniently to our noses. Bury them, and pour in our quick-lime and chlorides."

The Methodist treats at some length of the ballot frauds exposed by Hon. ROBERT B. ROOSEVELT in his speech at the Cooper Institute, of which it says:

"It is not often we get so much information from a single speech, and we thank Mr. ROOSEVELT for his full revelation and his outspoken denunciation of these frauds. In investigating wrongs, nothing is so wholesome as the descent from generals to particulars. Every New-Yorker has believed for years that he was robbed continually by the City rulers; but not till the publication of the details by the Tweed ring the City has been stirred to action. So we have long been aware of the rascality used at elections; but now that we have it described, item by item, we should be idiots if we did not apply a strong remedy. Mr. ROOSEVELT calls on his own party to repudiate this cheating, and to expel the cheats from its ranks. In the same spirit we call on myself citizens. We urge all men of whatever party to unite for this purpose. The corruption of the ballot-box is the precursor of revolution. Popular election is the peaceable method devised by our institutions of settling public questions. To be decisive, it must be honest. The people cannot be expected to submit patiently, year after year, to be cheated of their lawfully expressed will by corruption at the polls. It behooves us, for the sake of the permanence of representative government, to put an end to this corruption without delay."

The following article, from the Jewish Messenger, witnesses to the immense influence the United States Consul at Bucharest has exerted in ameliorating the condition of the Hebrews in Roumania:

"While the attention of the great Powers of Europe is directed to the situation in Roumania, one phase of political affairs there is of special interest to the friends of civil and religious liberty throughout the world. We have from time to time presented extracts from letters of our energetic and devoted correspondent, the United States Consul at Bucharest, which evinced his continuous interest and enthusiasm in the cause of Jewish emancipation. It is a great pleasure to learn that the climate has affected the health of his family, and trust our next intelligence will show that the illness was but momentary. He writes hopefully, and with his wonted earnestness. A recent number of the Roumanisches Post contains most conyincing evidence of the devotion with which Mr. PERIXOTTO has quietly labored to create and sustain a better and juster sentiment respecting the Israelites in Roumania. In an unostentatious and dignified way, without trespassing in letter or spirit upon the forbidden ground of consular interference with the affairs of the country, he has won upon the hearts of the leading men, and has satisfied the Government that its protection was due to the oppressed Hebrews, that their complete emancipation from popular tyranny and legal discrimination was a national duty, and would contribute to the national prosperity. The natural consequences of the residence at Bucharest of an intelligent, energetic and enthusiastic American Israelite are already perceived. The Post scraps together extracts from Roumanian journals, which illustrate the depth of inhuman satanic calumny, wherewith the 'Press' of that misguided country discusses the Jewish question, and the extraordinary influence with which they credit Mr. PERIXOTTO. God grant that our friend may have the great happiness of witnessing the complete emancipation of our Roumanian brethren! We call upon the Israelites of Europe and America to sustain our Consul—to maintain and enlarge the noble fund for the support of the first Israelitish Consul. Mr. PERIXOTTO cannot fully exercising his generous influence upon the Jews as well as the Christians of Roumania. The simple fact of his presence has stimulated the Jews of Bucharest, Jassy and other cities to unprecedented efforts. The rapidity with which this process is going on is one of the most cheering signs for the future of religion and the nation. Every advance in true catholicity, every sound criticism, every devout exercise of religious principle, every bond of union of men and women, regardless of creed and sect, for social reform and philanthropy, prepare the way for the new structure, and gather materials for its walls."

The Churchman in reviewing the "Union Prayer Book," deals with its compilers, and these who have adopted it, in no gentle manner. It says:

"And thus, by the ordering of those who are in places of authority, as our preface says, the old book was put on, and the new put in; and the work of revolution in the Jewish Church was begun and the world—and some claiming to be 'not of the world'—rejoice in the evangelical prospects of the now, at last, awakened Episcopal Church. We confess to an inability to enter into these semi-millennial or ante-millennial festivities. Our joy is marred by a few little considerations which obtrude themselves, and must be pondered before we can be sure that the good time is coming. The Union Prayer Book has hopes of uniting Christian people of various denominations on the basis of—Judaism! But even so, it is likely to be adopted by any Congregationalists because of its large license to individual Churches; nor by Presbyterians by reason of its repudiation of Infant Baptism, may admit of question. Doubtless Dr. LEWIS and Dr. PHILLIPS, and others, have an opinion. It is not necessary that we settle the question. We prefer to consider the book as a proposed solvent of our Church difficulties—an eirenicon for these times. It is not to be concealed that the sensational elements of the otherwise insufficient item is to be found in certain prophecies here and there interspersed, which point to 'deliverance' as the triad of the Liturgy, and the expectations that have been based upon the coming volumes. Whether this very book be the birth periseded by the mountainous labors, of which much has been said during the last twelvemonth, we cannot say. It is believed that the minister of 'Emmanuel Church' held office in a certain retirement recently, for the purpose of consultation. In this page or preface, whether it is the work of one man or of many; Whether any committee of divines or laymen, authorized or unauthorized, have wrought upon it, or reviewed it, or sanctioned it; whether it is the compilation of Churchmen, or Presbyterians, or Baptists, or as seems more probable, of all combined—we cannot say. It is intended to interest Churchmen any more than other Christian denominations. It goes forth to the Church and the world under the sole name and imprimatur of the great publisher of school-books. But if the book have no authority, and no one will be its sponsor, it must of course be expected to stand upon its merits. It is intended to supersede Churchman's as expected to concern them sufficiently to take the place of their Book of Common Prayer, and this by reason of its acknowledged superiority. Will it do it? Will it meet the stated wants of certain godly men in the Church, who love the Church and the Prayer Book, and who are dissatisfied in the latter certain changes of statement and alternative phrases? We opine not."

The Independent breaks out in a pean over the assured triumph of the reform movement in favor of honest municipal government. It says:

"We have, then, just begun the siege, and already the enemy confesses defeat. They challenge us to send a scouting party, and before it appears they blow up their outer works, and shoot shrapnel at each other. HALL and SWEENY are ready to surrender conveniently to TWEED and CONNOLLY. We have not yet thrown up our first parallel. Only a single doughty champion, JOHN FOLEY, one of whose gold pens brushed to sign the fraudulent City warrants, charges alone on the host to wipe out his handiwork's disgrace, and their entire camp is thrown into confusion. Even BARNARD, their trusted warder, opens the gates to the foe. The grand army of citizens is ready to follow up the attack, and their generals, on the day we go to press, will develop the lines of attack, which will be pressed with unflinching vigor. They will include civil suits and criminal suits. The Governor of the State will be appealed to for relief, and the next Legislature for an immediate repeal of the City charter. But even before the battle opens the enemy is flecing. Not a shot has been exchanged, and conference has been held between and we would not be surprised if TWEED and CONNOLLY should leap to follow him, if not immediately arrested. Let no one mend of duty be allowed them. An outraged people, who want and will have justice, and who somewhat prefer to gain it through the forms of the law, insists that the law's sharpest and swiftest remedies be applied. We owe it to our boasted principles of government, not yet perfect in its details, to prove that a republic which could triumphantly overcome the stoutest combination of forces will not be strangled by the coiled Blues that have wound about our public treasuries and Legislatures. Our faith in the people of the country has never failed. Our faith in the power of an honest public sentiment here in this Metropolis—so alien to the rest of the country in its Irish population, its Catholic religion, its ignorance, and its clustering vices—is gaining strength. They tell us in France that when a Frenchman looks on the beauty of their capital Frenchmen need to be proud of the proverb. In Europe they have also believed that New-York is America. It is generally all the America they know; and we have felt ashamed. We see the dawning of a day when we, too, may be as proud of our Metropolis as France now is ashamed of hers."

A Singular Homicide.

An agent of a sewing-machine company, who attempted in Philadelphia on Tuesday to remove a machine on which the installments had not been paid, had a struggle with the woman in whose possession it was, in which her child, which she had in her arms, received a blow on its head. The child died on Wednesday, and it being in evidence at the Coroner's inquest that death resulted from an effusion of water on the brain, a verdict was rendered exonerating the agent from all blame in the matter.

ROME.

The Rule of the Pope—A Te Deum—Scenes of Disorder—A Triduo of Thanksgiving—The Press and the Disturbances—Party Feeling and its Results.

From an Occasional Correspondent.

ROME, Friday, Aug. 25, 1871.

I suppose all the anniversary commemorations of PIUS IXth's remarkably long reign may now said to be over. I was going to say well over, which would have been unfortunate, as the grand celebrations of His Holiness, having outlived even the days by which Peter exceeded twenty-five years, ended in riot and disorder such as the streets of Rome have not witnessed since the famous Jesuit riots of last Spring. The 22d was the extreme limit of the mysterious period, and having happily exceeded it, it is to be hoped that the venerable Pontiff may now enjoy the long florid old age for which the MASTAI family is noted. At ninety years of age a MASTAI is still young. Before describing such unpeaceful subjects as party riots, I would fain linger upon the compliments and gifts which once more were laid at the Pope's feet. The beautiful and touching letter in which his Holiness declined the offering of the golden throne, did not prevent the devout Catholics of Naples from presenting him with a sedia gestatoria of metal richly gilt. The Roman "Society for Catholic Interests," gave him a magnificent rationale representing in jewels the Eternal Father enthroned upon a globe of lapis-lazuli starred with diamonds, having on his right the Blessed Virgin surrounded with angels. A frame of rubies and emeralds, by a curious coincidence combining with the brilliants, causes the sacred ornament to flash with the Italian colors! On the clasp by which it is fastened to the stolale is the family crest of the Pope. The pontifical chamberlains presented a golden pyx for the consecrated host, which PIUS IXth now constantly wears upon his breast.

A TE DEUM.

The only ceremony I attended was the Te Deum at San Giovanni Laterano, and not supposing there would be a greater crowd than on the 16th of June, I did not hurry particularly, and drove round by the Coliseum. There, however, it was more like the old times of the grand church festas, than anything that has been seen in Rome since the Italians made the holes in the ornamental fortifications last September, excepting always the absence of Cardinals' carriages. All the long street up to San Giovanni, and the spacious piazza itself, were closely packed with carriages, one stream advancing at a foot's pace to deposit their fashionable contents at the church door, the other returning in search of standing room somewhere or other. By the time I got into the church it was full of the most select company, to judge by the dresses. The priestly papers declare exultingly there were 20,000 adorers; more sober estimates reduce them to something between 4,000 and 5,000, and as to the flattering qualification, I cannot presume to form any judgment as to the extent of its truth, for the Papaline ladies are tired of wearing perpetual mourning, and came out on this occasion in gay colors, not confining themselves to yellow and white. As for devout dejeunon, every body knelt, and a most solemn and beautiful service it was; choicest music pealing from the choir, and the responses of the multitude rising in grand unison and filling the church with waves of sound.

SCENES OF DISORDER.

All went off very well. The benediction was over, and the crowd had gradually left the church. Much more than half the congregation was already far on the homeward way, when some riotous youths who had stuck papers with the arms of Savoy on the walls all along the Via del Colosseo, and effaced certain inscriptions of "Viva Pio Nono!" with tri-colored streaks, suddenly renewed an attempt they had made, it seems, when the carriages first approached the church, to cause disturbance. They flourished from a couple of cabs some Italian flags, and shouted the usual party cries, with the customary abusive epithets hurled at the priests and adherents of the temporal power. The Police invited them to be silent, and confiscated the flags; some blows were exchanged. An old Papalino Marchese got very much excited, and called out that he would "go to Berti!" The ladies of his party tried to keep him quiet, but he could not be got away without telling his opinion of the Liberals, and receiving some rough usage. Two or three rioters were arrested, and so the affair ended for that evening.

A TRIDUO OF THANKSGIVING.

On Thursday, the 24th inst., a Triduo of thanksgiving for the prolongation of the Pope's life, was commenced at the Church of Santa Maria Sopra Minerva, at 8 o'clock in the evening. A large congregation assembled here also, and there was a sermon, preached by the Jesuit Father TOMMASI. He is said to have used the term Barabbas, as applied to King VICTOR EMANUEL, and whether this be true or not, there is no doubt that the Pope's published reply to the address of the Catholic youth on this last occasion, likened his condition, and that of the Church, to the man in the parable, who fell among thieves on the way from Jerusalem to Jericho. It is, therefore, useless to say that the Papal party are innocent lambs, who give no provocation. Several known haters of the priests, wearing red cravats, formed groups near each door of the church. The Police, or Questurini, as they are called, repeatedly advised, and then ordered them to disperse, but in vain. Words became hot between the Reds and the preservers of order, so the soldiers were called out to assist in clearing the piazza and protecting the congregation, which presently began to issue from the church. After abusing the Questor and the ministers, two of whom, LANZA and SANDA, were in the piazza and witnessed the whole affair, the rioters made a rush off to the Questura, in Piazza San Silvestro, and here a scene of great confusion ensued. The Questor, Signor BERTI, came out into the crowd and endeavored to reason the disturbers of the peace into order, but was only answered with abuse. "Down with BERTI! he is in league with the priests! he is another Rauchi!" After the legal warning, the Questor ordered the guards to draw their weapons and disperse the mob by force, but to use the flat sides of their cutlasses. I should have mentioned that, among a number of arrests made in and about the piazza of the Minerva was that of TOGNETTI, brother of the wretch who blew up the Serristori barracks, and that it was for his release the attack was chiefly made upon the Questura. Of course the surrender of this man and several other ringleaders was not to be listened to, but in the scrimmage the Police are accused of having lost temper and used revolvers. Three men were wounded, and one poor man, the cook of a trattoria in Via Bocca di Leone, was killed by some chance shot, which still remains unaccounted for, as it was not a pistol-ball, and all the officers declare that the muskets of their men were not charged, and that they have examined them strictly since the affair, and not one of them bears any trace of having been recently used. The murdered man, REMERCHINO, was not concerned in the affray; he had run out into the street to call back a little boy. He was shot in the shoulder, the ball piercing his lungs, and some accounts say that the shot must have come from above, and not from the street.

LATEST NEWS.

SATURDAY, Aug. 26.

Nothing is spoken of but this last affair. This time, however, the ultra opposition journals of the Red shade are screaming loudest. The Osservatore Romano says that the Cardinal Vicar asked the question if it was the intention of the Government to stop the Triduo at the Minerva? He desired, in answer, that the Triduo should go on, engaging that no further annoyance to the church-goers should happen; and has issued a proclamation to the effect that no assemblage of people, with evident intention of disturbing order, shall escape the rigor of the law. At the same time, judicial inquiry is also to be made as to the expressions used by Padre TOMMASI, in his sermon. Yesterday after-noon the National Guards were called under arms, and the second day of the Triduo passed over peaceably.

PARTY FEELING.

It is not very extraordinary that occasional affrays should take place at Rome. Party feeling is running mountains high. The free-thinking Press pours out columns after column of revelations of priestly deceit and iniquity. Scandalous biographies of Cardinals and Monsignori; exposures of the fabrication of false relics; ridicule of modern miracles; demonstrations of the "absurdity of St. Peter's Pontificate at Rome;" abominations of the confessional, St. Alfonso Sigmori's Immoral Moral Theology, of Philosophy, and so forth. The organs of the priests are by no means behind hand in vituperation and violence. Prayers to the Blessed Virgin even, abound in such terms as the "foul cisterns of error, especially of Protestantism." Aspirations of the speedy success of the dread International are even indulged in, that so, in the chaos, the Pope and Bourbons may have their own again. What then is to be expected?

THE PART OF THE GOVERNMENT.

All quiet and moderate people are satisfied that the Italian Government has the will as well as the power to preserve order here. Even among the black-robed there are many reconciled, if not friends. Numbers of religious teachers have placed themselves under the instructions required by the Government for those who are to teach in the Municipal Schools. I was very much surprised to also three monsire go into PARAVIA'S libreria the other day, to purchase copy-books and pens. It is the shop where all the Government school-books are sold. The good ladies seemed rather agitated at finding themselves "in the market of the excommunicated," but went off in very good humor at the polite attention they received.

UNITED ITALY.

Two Capitals—Florentine Pictures—Affairs at Rome—Changes in the Ministry—The Pope and His Anti-Religious Sentiment in the Kingdom.

From Our Own Correspondent.

FLORENCE, Monday, Aug. 28, 1871.

It is pretty well understood that Rome is now the capital of the Kingdom of Italy; but there are a number of proofs that Florence is still the political centre. The sign-boards of several of the Ministers are on the buildings which they have ornamented for half a dozen years, and at least another twelve-month will be needed to get the great family of place-men settled in the new house. Florence is beginning to feel her widowhood; but the sentiment is hardly one of sorrow, for she is mourning in white garments. One or two newspapers that were shifted from Turin to Florence, when the capital came here, have been once more removed, and are now published at Rome. The proprietors of a great many shops have opened branches of their establishments in the new capital city, and some are to go away from here altogether. Have a dozen of the streets of Florence, with the marble, plate-glass, and gilding of the shop-fronts, were made as spruce as the best streets of Paris. It will put a strain upon the economical habits of the Florentines when left to themselves to keep up so much elegance. Very few sorrowful faces are seen yet; for most of those who are to be left behind, who rent houses, are consoling themselves with the hope of a reduction of at least one-third in the price of apartments. For the rest, a good deal of building is still going on, in fulfillment of contracts made when the prospect was brightest that Florence would remain for a long time the capital. The improvements made in the new quarters are great, and will compare with those made in almost any of the modern cities, whether for convenience or beauty.

AFFAIRS IN ROME.

At Rome, for those who follow the Government, and seek to be housed in some fashion, embarrassments multiply and great confusion reigns. The placemen in the public offices are in numbers about twice what are needed for the work to be done, and, for most of them, the pay is sufficiently slender. The price of houses at Rome, considering the few conveniences, has always been high, and, with the new demand, the augmentation is considerable. The activity of an army of workmen for five years will be needed to put the city in condition to receive the material and personnel of that confused mass known as the Government, to say nothing of the endless tribe of those who follow in its rear. At the moment it would be hard to find some of the public offices, as they are neither in the old nor the new capital city, but are set up temporarily somewhere on the road. An effort is making to reduce the time by rail between Florence and Rome, which will be as great a convenience to foreign visitors as to travelers of the country. The time at present is about twelve hours, which for the quick trains should be reduced one-third. Steps will be taken to have a third line of railroad put in action—that by Sienna and Orvieto, the connection of which with the main trunk beyond the Roman frontier is not yet complete. The Italian system of railways is now pretty well perfected, and new activity will be given by the opening of more direct communication with central Europe by the passage under the Alps. Movement over the roads increases every year, in spite of the rather high rates charged; while the return in dividends would be on some roads next to nothing without the guarantees of the Government. It still costs $8 to go from Florence to Rome in the first class, and the distance is less than 200 miles. But present modes of communication are a vast improvement upon the diligence system, almost universal when we first knew Italy.

CHANGES IN THE MINISTRY.

There has been considerable talk lately about a Ministerial crisis. The present incumbents of office have stuck to their places heroically, and proved that even here men with sufficient firmness can be found to resist long enough the fickle impulses of popular caprice, to enjoy a fair opportunity for the development of policy. But now the charge is made that personal sympathies and antipathies among the Ministers themselves have brought confusion into the circle, and produced a hitch, from which there can be relief only by changes to be made in the composition of the body. Signor ACTON, the Minister of Marine, wishes to be relieved, and Admiral RIBOTTY, the old incumbent, has been once more named for the post, but has declined, as he has no desire to be again exposed to the perplexities of office. The Minister of Finance is not willing to concede more than twenty-seven millions of francs for the annual expenditure in that branch of the service, while several millions more are asked for. The Minister of Public Works, GADDA, finds difficulties in his Department, but clings with tenacity to his place, while his associates are doing what they can to crowd him from it. He has been nominated to an office with somewhat dissimilar duties, the Prefecture of Rome. Since the death of CAVOUR Italy has hardly had a Minister quite up to the demands of events so great as those which have made up the past dozen years of her history.

THE POPE AND HIS RULE.

The friends of the Pope are rejoicing that the memorable date in the calendar is at length reached which makes PIUS IX. of all the Pontiffs the one who has sat longest in the Chair of St Peter. On the 3d of this month the period of twenty-five years, three months and seven days was rounded out which made PIUS IX. the decano of all the Bishops of Rome. The ancient proverb, non videbis dies Petri, is no longer true. The Holy Father has not been happy in the experiences which time has brought him in his struggle to execute the duties of his exalted charge, and the length of his reign has been but a sorrowful triumph. The Pontiff is now in his eightieth year, and the prospect of half a dozen or more years of life is not denied by any accumulation of physical ails. The Te Deums sung in several of the churches of Rome in the Pope's honor gave occasion to popular manifestations in opposition, of so riotous a character as to call for the interposition of the public authority. One man was killed and several wounded in the fray which followed the efforts to restore order. It is not a good sign that the lower or more lawless classes of the population in the cities are disposed to insult those wearing the ecclesiastical garb, and to go as far as they dare in hindering the exercise of the sacred functions. This grossness of manners, the fruit of false notions of liberty, as present restrained by force, will by and by be corrected by a better education.

RELIGIOUS SENTIMENT.

The Pope has made a speech in reply to an address from an association of young men of the country, with a gift of one hundred thousand francs. Societies of young men who have had a religious training are forming in different cities, with the object in view to promote habits of sobriety and piety among the youth of the country. The plan laid out seems to be somewhat less than which has produced so much good under the direction of the Young Man's Christian Associations of Protestant countries. It is quite time for such work to be done here, for, with all the bell-ringing and incense-burning of the churches, there is a spirit of irreverence or positive profanity almost universal among young men, which has promised no good to the new civilization. Many young men with any pretension to fashion would confess their shame to be seen in the church with any other purpose but that of love-making.

GIFTS FROM THE FAITHFUL.

As the Pope long ago refused to accept the sum of sixty thousand francs a month, which the Italian Government was willing to accept to meet the expenses of the Vatican, the Holy Father falls back upon the contributions of the faithful in all the world. These continue to come in liberally. Many other presents besides gifts in money are sent from all quarters. A few days back a new sedia gestatoria, or portable throne, such as that on which the Pontiff is carried on great occasions of ceremony, was sent from the City of Naples. It came to the care of the Minister of France, as diplomatic property, as the Holy Father has sometimes, under the new order of things, had the boxes containing his presents opened at the Custom-house, and duties charged as on any other merchandise. The cost of this throne, the newspapers tell us, was one hundred and forty thousand francs.

Doings in the Assembly—The Legislature Constitutional—Gambetta's Policy—Sentiment of the Minority—The Health of M. Thiers—The Prospects—The Cause of the Empire—General Discontent—Trying the Communists—Honors to Mr. Seward.

From Our Own Correspondent.

PARIS, Friday, Sept. 1, 1871.

"Les jours se suivent et ne se ressemblent pas" is an old French saying which may well be applied to the National Assembly, for its sessions follow, and only resemble each other in their unforeseen results and in their persistent tendency to go from bad to worse. The session of Wednesday was by all odds the worst since the first day at Bordeaux; yet it is in possible for good to come out of evil—if a violation of law and of principle can bring good results to a country—then may we hope something from this important day. I say important, yet one hardly knows whether it was important or not. No one seems to know just how matters stand. A Deputy who was present through the entire debate, tired in vain to explain the results, but soon got himself into a labyrinth from which he could not clear himself except by a fin d'esprit. "I cannot keep to the question," he said, laughing, "for it is like the strumand of the fable who asked the chicken with what sauce it would suit him to be cooked. 'But I do not want to be cooked at all,' replied the chicken. 'Ah, my chicken, you are flying from the question.'" The Republican Left presents the Rivet proposition in order to establish the Republic. But, says the Assembly, we do not want the Republic at all. That is flying from the question responds the Left, pressing its proposition again as if sure of a victory; and when it can no longer bear this reckless conduct, the majority turns upon its assailants and puts an end to all of their petty schemes by declaring itself constituent. That is the important result of the session. But, one asks, what of the Rivet motion? It is only with extreme difficulty that we can trace it through this tangled wood of motions and amendments. Virtually it was given up for the Vitet substitute, with the Choiseul amendment agreed to by the Ministers, and the Dufaure amendment recognizing the services of M. THIERS, and three other amendments of varying importance, until, at last, one could barely trace the final proposition to the original document offered by M. RIVET.

THE ASSEMBLY CONSTITUTIONAL.

But one thing is decided—the Assembly has declared itself constituent. The majority so persistently ignored by the Left has shown its force, and has come between the country and the schemes of these reckless, unthinking demagogues. While I do not believe that this Chamber is constituent, or that it was intended to be, and while I do believe that new elections would give the Republicans a large increase if not a majority, I cannot but think that the Assembly has chosen the wisest and safer part. If it has taken a step not strictly legal, it has done so for the good of the nation, and it requires but a cursory examination to establish the fact. That the majority which contains no Republicans showed no fear of the name of the Republic, and had no objection to making M. THIERS President of the present Republic during the existence of the Assembly, is the best possible evidence of its patriotism and honesty. It was the Left which forced this matter upon the Chamber, and no step which has yet been taken has given so hard a blow to the Republican Party.

GAMBETTA'S POLICY.

I recently noticed the plan of M. GAMBETTA to dissolve the Assembly and to force the country into new elections. In the very face of the Germans, and when the journals of Berlin show how the confidence of the German Government has been shaken, such a step would be madness; yet it is rule or ruin with most of these men, and they care nothing for risking the safety of the country. Gen. FAIDHERBE resigned in the Gambetta interest, and M. EDGAR QUINET presented a proposition for the immediate dissolution of the Chamber. A number of other harassing motions were prepared, and the Left had come to the determination to spring this matter upon the Assembly on all occasions, to impede legislation and to irritate the majority until it literally broke up in a row. The Rivet proposition was the beginning of this disgraceful plan, and it was to face it and to settle these plots once for all that the Assembly declared itself constituent. Certainly, it seems to me that only the Republ

Another Step Toward the End.

If Mayor HALL wishes to put an honest man in Controller CONNOLLY'S place he has now an opportunity of doing it. Mr. CONNOLLY is prepared to hand over his office to a gentleman whose honor is above all suspicion, and whose fidelity to the public interests has already been proved over and over again—Mr. ANDREW H. GREEN, formerly of the Central Park Commission. He has already appointed Mr. GREEN Deputy Controller, and placed all the books and papers in his department in Mr. GREEN'S possession. The following correspondence explains the whole transaction:

NEW-YORK, Sept. 14, 1871.

Richard B. Connolly, Esq.:

SIR: I have considered the questions which you have submitted to me, and, to prevent the possibility of misapprehension, reduce my advice to writing.

1. On the assumption of your innocence of the charges made against you, I do not consider resignation of your office as your proper course. Your duty is to give every facility to the fullest investigation, and to abide the result.

2. In your answer to the request of Mayor HALL for your resignation, you have stated that your official acts which have been impeached, were "supervised and approved by the superior vigilance" of Mayor HALL; that equal responsibility for them attaches to him; and that, in his affidavit in the pending litigation, those acts were adopted and vindicated by him.

Even if you are conscious of having done wrong in your trust, you owe it to the community not to commit another wrong, but to make every reparation within your power.

To surrender your office into the hands of a confederate would be a fresh betrayal of your trust, and, while it might damage yourself, would fail of doing justice to the community. No man selected by Mayor HALL can, without some other moral support from the community, have the public confidence. He will be compromised by a suspected understanding with the "Ring" or by the acceptance of the favor. You practically make your own successor. As the law now stands he can assume your office only by an arrangement, to which you are a party, to create a vacancy for him. The man you give place to ought not to be a tool of those implicated in the transactions which excite the public distrust and alarm. He should be the nominee of the citizens now seeking to protect the people. In that way alone can he have the confidence of the public or improve the credit of the City.

Fortunately the law affords a perfect solution of the case. By section 8 of chapter 378 of the laws of 1870, you are authorized to appoint a Deputy Controller, who shall with in addition to his other powers, possess every power and shall perform every duty belonging to the office of Controller, whenever the said Controller shall by due written authority, and during a period to be specified in such authority, designate and authorize the said Deputy Controller to possess the power and perform the duty aforesaid."

My advice to you is to forthwith appoint ANDREW H. GREEN as such Deputy Controller; to leave him to exercise the full powers of your office, without conditions and without interference; with complete custody of all books and papers belonging to your office; with the appointment of all persons whom he may think necessary to protect the public property and interests, and to enable him to carry out the most searching investigation, and to aid the Committee appointed for that purpose.

I have carefully considered the selection I recommended. Mr. GREEN has knowledge and experience in the affairs of the City; has the most reliable character for integrity; has no relations which could mislead him by bad influences, and is strong in the public confidence. If you adopt my advice I shall insist on his accepting the disagreeable duty for the sake of the public interest.

Yours, respectfully, W. F. HAVEMEYER.

SEPT. 15, 1871.

Hon. William F. Havemeyer:

SIR: Acknowledging the kindness which dictated your note to me of this date, and yielding to the force of its suggestions, I have determined to accept and favor the advice it offers. In thus acting, I am governed by a warm desire to restore the City department over which I preside to the confidence of the community, and to secure such an examination of the affairs of the City as will satisfy the just demands of the public. I have therefore appointed Mr. ANDREW H. GREEN to the office of Deputy Controller, believing his known character for ability and integrity, fortified by your approbation, will furnish abundant assurance that the financial administration of the City will be satisfactory, and will enable the Department to command the necessary funds at once to discharge its obligations to the laborers upon our public works, forming as they do the most meritorious class of the City's creditors.

Very respectfully yours,
RICHARD B. CONNOLLY, Controller.

CONTROLLER'S OFFICE OF THE CITY OF NEW-YORK, Sept. 14, 1871.

Mr. Andrew H. Green:

MY DEAR SIR: The office of Deputy Controller of this City having become vacant by the removal of Mr. RICHARD A. STORRS, I hereby designate and appoint you, ANDREW H. GREEN, Deputy Controller of the City of New-York.

I earnestly press upon you the acceptance of this office. The critical juncture in the affairs of the City and the condition of public sentiment seem to demand that the important transactions of my Department should be conducted by one possessing the unlimited confidence of the public. In determining upon the action required by the present exigency, I have been guided by the advice of gentlemen whose respectability and prominence elevate them above all suspicion of unfair or interested motive. I am endeavoring to act with sincere regard to the public interest; and to insure it against possible casualties, and pursuing the authority and phraseology of the statute, I hereby designate and authorize you to possess the power and perform all and every duty belonging to the office of Controller of the City of New-York from the time of this appointment to the 1st day of February, 1872.

Very respectfully,
RICHARD B. CONNOLLY,
Controller of the City of New-York.

CONTROLLER'S OFFICE, Sept. 15, 1871.

Mr. Richard A. Storrs:

MY DEAR SIR: Circumstances, which seem to me imperative, require a change in the office of Deputy Controller of this City. They do not at all reflect upon your official rectitude, but regard only the public interest. With the kindest feeling toward you, I am obliged to notify you of your removal. You will therefore please take notice that I hereby remove you from the office of Deputy Controller of the City of New-York.

Very truly yours,
RICHARD B. CONNOLLY, Controller.

Mr. ANDREW H. GREEN has accepted the trust thus confided in him, and was yesterday properly qualified for his duties. He has taken proper measures to prevent any further "burglary" in the Controller's office, either by W. M. TWEED or any other of his confederates. The explanation of the new complication is simply this: TWEED, HALL and SWEENY concluded an arrangement by which CONNOLLY was to be made the scape-goat of all the Ring frauds. STORRS was to be appointed acting Controller, in case of CONNOLLY'S resignation, and then was to make way for some one who would manipulate the official papers in such a manner as to exonerate HALL, SWEENY and TWEED from blame. The documents which specially implicated TWEED, were the stolen vouchers—the documents which implicated HALL and SWEENY are still in the Controller's office. They relate to the proceedings which have been carried on under the new Board of Apportionment, and they show that HALL and SWEENY are quite as guilty as either of the other two members of the Ring. CONNOLLY, in point of fact, has turned State's evidence—objecting to being singled out as sole culprit, he will drag the others with him in his fall. The public will be quite satisfied with this arrangement. It does not want scape-goats, but justice. It does not care to wreak vengeance on one man, but to see all the guilty parties brought to punishment. Mr. ANDREW H. GREEN will doubtless make good use of the opportunities now at his command. The papers at his disposal reveal truths which will make the public stand amazed at the corruption of the very men for whom their support is asked by papers like the Herald. Even the World will find it a hard task to vilify ANDREW H. GREEN, or to assert that he is not a proper man to be placed in CONNOLLY'S position. Mr. GREEN, as we need scarcely say to readers at a distance, is a Democrat—but he is a man who would be a credit to any party, and whose verdict we should be quite willing to accept. It will be seen that this is not a "partisan" arrangement on the part of Republicans. The affair is being fought out in Democratic circles—honest Democrats against thieves. Mr. GREEN cannot legally be removed for some weeks to come—if at all; and it does not need weeks of investigation to prove that HALL, SWEENY, and TWEED are to the full as deserving of public indignation as CONNOLLY. Let no one of the Four escape. CONNOLLY'S action is calculated to bring the whole fabric down by the run, and the public ask no more and will be satisfied with no less. Ex-Mayor HAVEMEYER'S letter to CONNOLLY will strike everybody as being eminently judicious, and as revealing an accurate estimate of the necessities of the hour. Let us have a clean sweep. Nothing else will help us in our present difficulties.

Why Not Get Out?

Why not? It is the easiest, and indeed the only practical solution of the present crisis. The great Four cling to their offices like limpets to a rock. Yesterday they were all, except CONNOLLY, in consultation with Gov. HOFFMAN at the Clarendon Hotel. They were cudgeling their distracted brains to hit upon some expedient of cozening the public without sacrificing their present opportunities of plundering that public. Now all such schemes as these are bound to fail. TWEED, SWEENY, HALL and CONNOLLY have taken an equal part in the corruptions and misrule of the local Government, and it is impossible that any one of them can be saved at the expense of the other. SWEENY is a more cunning rogue than CONNOLLY, but he is a rogue, and therefore ought to be kicked out of his present position. HALL still keeps the Herald on his side, but the Herald has sacrificed the little influence it ever had by dealing falsely with the public throughout this great crisis. To the present hour, for instance, it has dishonestly suppressed all the fraudulent warrants, the armories accounts, and the other proofs we have furnished of the Ring's knavery. The public will not stand this treatment from any journal, and it has punished the Herald in a way that paper is likely to remember for some time to come.

But for us, indeed, the Herald would have suffered still more severely. We warned it of what would happen if it made itself the official journal of Mayor HALL, and went into a conspiracy to deceive the public. The bitter lessons it has received recently have served to give point to our friendly warnings. It now comes out against the "Ring," although keeping up its allegiance to the chivalrous Mayor HALL. On Friday it spoke of the "revelations recently made with regard to the extravagant expenditures" of the Ring. Its readers must have wondered what revelations and what expenditures it meant! It also spoke of the "robbery" committed by the present rulers of the City—having on many previous occasions declared that there had been no robbery anywhere, and that the cry of the TIMES was a false alarm. Yesterday it kept on the same tack—still having a diminishing circulation to goad it on—and actually made this astounding admission:

"Claims of an outrageous character, bearing upon their face the appearance of highway robbery, have been audited in the Controller's Office and paid by that officer. The bonds needed to realise the money have been raised by the Board of Apportionment, which is virtually in the hands of the Controller."

Considering that the Herald first denied that any such claims had been made, and then suppressed all evidence of them, and then declared that they were made under the old Board of Supervisors—the above paragraph must be regarded as an instance of a striking conversion. And seeing that the Herald owes this conversion entirely to the TIMES, we really think it might be a little more civil to us. We have saved it from smashing its head against a stone-wall, and it treats us in return with the most heartless ingratitude. Not only does it set its fifteen editorial writers (one-fourth "European") to rail at us, but it also allows A. OAKEY HALL, Esq., to repeat his Leader articles in its well-known and widely-appreciated "intellectual department." Now all this is very shocking. The Herald ought to have some appreciation of its true friends. It must come round to our view of the City crisis, sooner or later—it must throw HALL over, with the other rogues—and why does it not do it at once, with a good grace, and send its respectful compliments to us for giving it the hint? Its boundless conceit led it to believe that it could save the Ring and hamboozle the public, but it soon found out its mistake in that respect. It still thinks it can save its bosom friend, OAKUM HALL. But it is again mistaken. As the boys used to sing, it must "go the whole hog or none," and it ought to be very much obliged to us for telling it what to do in time to save its porridge.

If HALL and his friends had any respect for the public, they would get out of the way, without further wriggling and twisting. At present they are only causing a dead-lock in the City Government. They are known to be equally culpable, and the people are fully assured that they are utterly unworthy of confidence. The machinery of government is blocked, because HALL, TWEED and SWEENY—for CONNOLLY is ready to go—refuse to make to the public the only atonement in their power. The least they can do, considering all they have done, is to stand out of the way. But they still stick to their old trade. They are still waiting for the storm to "blow over." HALL, TWEED, and SWEENY will never budge till somebody forces them to move. The public may look on for some little time longer, but presently the whole gang will discover that this is not a tempest in a tea-pot, but that they will be obliged to withdraw from positions of trust, lest a worse thing happen unto them. HALL has no excuse now for not resigning. CONNOLLY will go—why should HALL remain?

The French Rage for Change.

The feverish passion for change is ever a sign of weakness. The woman tormented with a ceaseless thirst for novelty hardly ever makes a good wife; the man who has the same affliction is rarely strong, or noble or great; and we may be sure of the nation that exhibits it that its condition is unhealthy, if not absolutely one of inevitable decay. It is the many signs of this sort that make those who love France, and who would gladly see her recover from her prostration, despair of her. The incurable restlessness, the childish solicitude about trifles, the utter incapacity to see and appreciate her true situation, now so observable in Paris, are at once painful and ominous. It is plain that no one believes in what is, and yet there is a pervading distrust of all that might be. The same journals waver whether to seek the "guiding hand," now universally admitted to be indispensable, on the benches of the Left or at Chiselhurst. Whether there shall be a fresh revolution of demagogues, or an Imperial restoration, seems to rest on the weight of a feather. The scales are in even suspense, and the slightest accident may decide the result.

Some of the indications of uneasiness, of the ground-swell that presages the popular storm for fresh alteration, are betrayed half unconsciously by the Parisian journals. Thus, the Figaro has discovered that each change of their Government costs the French about twelve millions of francs for recoinage alone. The Figaro does not see in this an argument against such changes. It is merely led to suggest that instead of using a stamp which must be abolished when France goes from Empire to Republic, or when any other revolution occurs, the coin should be inscribed simply "Gallia" or "La France." The suggestion in itself is not a bad one, but the deliberate contemplation it implies of a continual succession of disorders is both whimsical and pathetic. The recurrent changes of the names of the Paris streets, avenues and squares give rise to a similar impression. A magnificent new street runs from the corner of the Rue de la Paix to the Place de la Bourse. The Empire styled this the Rue du DIX Decembre; the Republic transformed it into the Rue du Quatre Septembre; the Commune changed it to something else; and now the Municipality is about to christen it anew. The Avenue de l'Imperatrice for a time bore the name of the defender of Strasbourg—which none could grudge that noble soldier—and became the Avenue Uhrich; it is now—for a week or so—the Avenue de Bois de Boulogne. It is said the Rue Bonaparte, which has been renamed ten times, is again to undergo the operation; and, moreover, that the Republican Party in the Municipality, being hostile to religion, intends to propose that all streets named after saints should drop special reference to them and be known as Rue Antoine, Louis, Honoré, &c. We are also gravely assured that another party in the Municipal Council insists that, as this is a utilitarian age, streets should be named, not after celebrated people, events, or other places, but after things in general use, such as Telegraph-street, Steam-engine-street, Omnibus-square, Soap-boilers'-avenue, &c. The Prefect of Paris, for his part, not to be outdone in poetic suggestion, desires, as a caution against future extravagance, that the new thoroughfares of HAUSSMANN should be named after what they cost, as Twenty-five Million-street, Boulevard of Fifty Millions, and so on; but it is doubtful whether M. LEON FAY has strength enough at present to carry out his euphonious design.

These may be called the straws that show the drift of the current. In graver things, however, the same reckless spirit is unmistakable. M. THIERS cannot agree with the legislative majority, and the Liberals can no longer agree with the Conservatives. "Revolution and Cæsarism," says the Journal de Paris, "which are in reality one and the same thing, are regaining the ground they have lost." There may be a repetition of old experiments, and, possibly, the versatile French may devise some new one; but it would not be at all strange, or out of character, were they to turn to the Empire again as swiftly as they turned from it before, and if the purple were to gain fresh acceptance because of the excesses of the Commune and the feebleness of the Republic.

The Innocent Sweeny.

The absurdity of the plea of innocence now being so strenuously put forth on behalf of PETER B. SWEENY is self-evident. According to this plea, Mr. SWEENY has for years lived and moved among the most corrupt politicians that have ever disgraced a civilized community, and came forth from their society not only entirely without guilt, but in perfect ignorance of anything wrong having been committed by any of them. Now whatever else PETER B. SWEENY may have been called, no one has ever termed him a fool, or denied his intimate acquaintance with the details of City Government. When, therefore, it is remembered that SWEENY was City Chamberlain up to 1870, and, in that capacity, received and paid all warrants drawn upon the Treasury, and only quitted the office to be succeeded by his brother-in-law, JOHN J. BRADLEY, is it not plain that he must have had knowledge of the bills of GARVEY, INGERSOLL & COMPANY?

Both SWEENY and BRADLEY were also Commissioners of the Sinking Fund, a Board composed of the Mayor, Controller, Chamberlain, Corporation Counsel and Recorder, and whose chief duties directly appertain to the debt of the City and County. Can his friends explain how it was possible for him to serve on that Board without acquiring a knowledge of the rate at which the debt was being accumulated? Mr. HESSING, SWEENY'S brother-in-law, who had been made City Auditor by him, sat at a desk in the same room as the County Auditor. He certainly had no secrets from Mr. SWEENY, and undoubtedly apprised him of what was going on in that office. It is now alleged that the City Auditor himself is implicated in some of these matters, but this cannot be positively asserted until a publication of the City accounts can be extorted from the Controller.

Everybody acquainted with City Hall affairs, knows that the tax levies presented to the Legislature were largely SWEENY'S work. Rooms were always provided at the Delevan House, during the session, for the use of the Ring, of which he was the acknowledged leader. In these rooms the tax levies were concocted, and here also the Committee on Cities, (that great originator of corrupt jobs,) of which the well-known ALEXANDER FREAR was Chairman, frequently met to put their "jobs" into the shape suggested by the superior sagacity of PETER B. SWEENY. As a member of the Board of Apportionment, SWEENY must, as a matter of course, have been apprised of the robberies that had been perpetrated upon the public, for it was not only their special duty but it was absolutely necessary, that full and detailed information should be obtained of the expenditures of the City and County Governments, to enable them to make up their appropriations.

Even if it should be conceded that frauds amounting to a million or so might have been perfected without SWEENY'S knowledge, it is "too thin" (to use the City Hall slang) for a person so familiar with City matters to plead ignorance of frauds that amount to tens of millions of dollars, and which have been discussed by the Press for several years past. Is it not singular that a high-toned man should have not only kept silent so long, but should have continued in fellowship with CONNOLLY and TWEED, even after the exposure which appeared in the columns of the TIMES? Substantially the only defense put forth by the Democratic Press in regard to these frauds is that the money (except, of course, such as went to pay for the diamonds, palaces, &c., &c., of the Ring and their subordinates) was devoted to buying up Republican votes to secure the passage of Mr. SWEENY'S pet bills. As this work was managed by SWEENY, it would appear from the admissions of his own supporters that he not only must have known that the money was stolen, but that it was applied for his benefit, and to increase the power of the corrupt gang of which he was the brains.

Putting Prisoners to the Torture.

If there are any deeper depths to which the art of "interviewing" can be sunk, Chicago reporters are sure to find them. One of these gentlemen was recently favored with an interview with the renowned murderess and adulteress Mrs. LAURA FAIR, now in prison in San Francisco. Mrs. FAIR is guilty enough to merit the severest punishment, but the codes of civilized nations have long since abolished torture, and even so wicked a woman as she, lying in her cell awaiting execution, might have been spared the infliction of heartless impertinence. She evidently took this view of her case herself, for the enterprising reporter acknowledges in his account of the affair that he only obtained admission by elaborate lying, and that, after being admitted, he succeeded in worming himself into the woman's confidence by continued falsehood. Of course his first business was to take notes for a description of his victim, as she reclined sick and in pain before him.

His amplification of these notes is a fine testimony to his native delicacy. "She wore a wrapper," he tells us, "of some inexpressive material, but cheerful in color, which, although belted at the waist, somewhat mystified her form, so that I could not see much." It would be an interesting query what extent of display a woman in her cell, under sentence of death, is expected to make of her charms to a Paul Pry who obtrudes himself upon her by artful misrepresentation. If he "could not see much," he seems to have made a very close observation of what the poor wretch could not well conceal from him. "Her neck," he remarks, "rises squarely from her shoulders, is neither delicate nor burly, and supports a head of the average size in women," said head "is well poised, with a round intelligent forehead, regular and well-defined eyebrows, smooth cheeks, which recede from the forehead as if in harmony with the design of an oval face, but which is interrupted by the chin which widens somewhat and thereby conflicts with the finer indications of the face above." Without stopping to unravel the intricacy of this analysis of female beauty, we pass on to what remains:

"The mouth is composed of lips of reasonable fullness, that are womanly without being voluptuous, that open squarely rather than with those curves characteristic of paintings of women, and which, when open, reveal rows of white and not perfectly regular teeth, and which also, when drawn back in a smile or in conversation, corrugate into wrinkles, and dimples that portion of the face lying to the right and just below the mouth."

The literary excellence of this passage is only equaled by its characteristic reflections. CHARLES KINGSLEY says somewhere, breaking off in an attempt to characterize a woman's face, that it is useless, as in a landscape every man will find in it something of the spirit with which he looks on it. So even desperate Mrs. FAIR ought not to be blamed if a brilliant reporter finds in her face the attributes he is used to hunting for.

After having scanned the face and form of the prisoner sufficiently, our reporter proceeded to plague her with questions, and with exquisite cruelty asked her about all the newspaper men who had written vulgar letters about her—the latter, it is to be presumed, to prepare her for his own when she should see it. "It was now," he relates—

"that I began to discover that the face had other characteristics which were latent when her countenance was in repose. Now and then, when she became warm, with the recital, the calmness of her blue-gray eye became lighted with a steely glow that possessed a strong magnetic power. In rest, her face was scarcely above common-place; in action, faint blushes lightened across her cheek, her eye deepened, and glowed with a strange fascination, and her smile seemed an expansion, a centre of magnetic forces. I saw now the fascination of the face."

The "fascination of the face" does not seem to have worked upon his feelings much, however, for he proceeds to tell that in a pretty direct manner he asked the unfortunate wretch whether she would rather be imprisoned for life or be hanged. She replied, in a spirit that ought to have made the interviewer ashamed of his own unmerciful and selfish purpose, that, for her daughter's sake she would rather die, that the girl might "go away, and the stain, after a while, be forgotten." The conversation lasted after this "some time," and as the reporter rose to go he shot a Parthian arrow at the poor woman by telling her that he was "connected with the Chicago Times, and should publish a letter about this interview unless she prohibited it." Mrs. FAIR did not care to go through the useless ceremony of imposing another falsehood on his overburdened conscience, and so, without prohibition or permission, she let him go.

How Not to Prevent Accidents.

The circular of the Massachusetts Railroad Commissioners, inviting a conference of the State railway companies at Boston, to consider the best possible means of preventing accidents for the future, is likely to lead to important results. If, as is alleged, the deficiencies which caused the disaster at Revere affect in a greater or less degree the entire railroad system of the State, they cannot be too soon amended. It is difficult to conceive how any railroad could be run for a week without accident in the slovenly, reckless, and irresponsible manner in which the Eastern Road is shown to have been conducted. The criminal and almost inconceivable negligence of this Company and its officers, amply brought out in the Coroner's investigation, is even more sharply defined in the summing up of the Commissioners. The most ordinary safeguards were neglected. Operating a single-track road, always and obviously more dangerous than the double-track, this imbecile and fossil corporation yet rejected the aid of what is well styled "one of the oldest, most ordinary, and least expensive of appliances in operating railroads"—the telegraph. With all the terrible experience of previous collisions to urge them to the use of every help that inventive genius could offer, the engineer of the express-train found himself to the fatal crisis without the aid of the patent brake, which every other reputable road in the country has long since adopted. It is the testimony of the Commissioners, that with such a brake the collision, in spite of all previous fatuity and recklessness, might still have been prevented. And lastly, although the close proximity of the stations on the road gave every facility for "a perfect system of signals, no such appliances were in use, nor had their adoption ever been considered." Was there ever a more damning indictment of negligence and inefficiency presented against any public body?

We have been accustomed to look to Massachusetts for thoroughness, intelligence and fidelity in the public service. But the report of the Railroad Commissioners is sadly in conflict with this good opinion. A more revolting instance of official mismanagement than that of the Eastern Railroad can scarcely be conceived. Yet we are now told that the other State Railroads are, generally speaking, very little better. If this is true, and the Railroad Commissioners ought to know, it is difficult to see how they are to relieve themselves from the suspicion of sharing the same incompetency which they so justly condemn. These defects in railroad management which are now revealed to them in the vivid shock of the Revere disaster, it was in their power, if not a part of their duty, to have found out and published long ago. If that was not the intent of their creation, the reason of their being is not very clear. Yet now when all the terrible damage has been done, which a little foresight and trouble on their part might have avoided, they assume a vast deal of virtuous indignation and official zeal, and make a great pretense of calling the railway companies to strict account. It might gratify the people of Massachusetts, and would certainly satisfy a great amount of intelligent curiosity elsewhere, to know precisely what the Railroad Commissioners have done toward discharging the duties of their most responsible positions. To find out after an accident that it was due to causes they should have anticipated and removed, is to render the Commonwealth a very inadequate service. A Coroner's jury could do as much, and a Coroner's jury is not usually a model of wisdom. If her railway companies and commissioners are fair samples of her other public officers, we shall have to suspect that Massachusetts is not much better served than New-York.

MINOR TOPICS.

France has finally disarmed the National Guard, and one ever-present danger to the public peace has been at last removed. The National Guard, which has played so important a part in the history of the French revolutions, was organized by the law of Sept. 28, 1791. According to the theory of its originators, it represented the nation armed, and it was designed to serve as a safeguard against the invasion of the Executive power, whatever that ambitious body should betray its trust. The Empire wisely, finally, took this latter tradition, and made the National Guard a highly-subordinate arm of the defensive service of the country. In the absence of anything like thorough military training, the citizen soldiery degenerated into an armed crowd, without any of the unswerving obedience nursed by discipline, and with all the exaggerated sense of their own importance, for sakes of the possession of arms and a somewhat undefinite sphere of duty. As late events have proved, they were chiefly dangerous to their own countrymen, and their suppression is a great step toward the restoration of political stability in France.

A correspondent of the Globe gives a rather interesting insight into the political complexities of the rural districts of France. Under the Empire, he says, the Mayor was the virtual nominee of a few hundred proprietors, and he gives a sample of how this functionary was accustomed to influence the exercise of universal suffrage. One commune is referred to, where, in the plebiscitary vote of 1870, the ballots were deposited openly, and the Empire was of course ratified for fear of displeasing the Mayor by an overwhelming majority. There was but one elector, "a stubborn old peasant," who had the courage to vote "no," to the great wrath of the Imperialist Mayor. When, in the whirligig of change the peasantry got at length a free election, they chose the stubborn rioter of 1870 to exercise the functions of Mayor under the Republic. This writer maintains that the French peasantry is neither royalist, or has been pretended, nor Imperialist, but once placed in the enjoyment of their liberties "they rush to Republicanism, like water to a river." Their Orleanism, he alleges, depends on the fear of their great, just as their Imperialism depended on the fear of their Mayor.

Quite a lively debate has been originated by Mr. PERCY FITZGERALD'S new book, The Kembles. Fanny, the question at issue being whether the great Mrs. SIDDONS ever wrote was not a lady's maid. The idea of the Tragedy Queen, the exalted representative of Constance, Volumnia and Lady Macbeth, dressing hair, mending stockings or bringing in the tea, seems too much for some delicate nerves to stand. Nevertheless, the truth is that SARAH KEMBLE did live at Guy's Cliff as lady's maid and reader to the wife of Mr. BEREW GREATHEED. She was never, as has been alleged, in the service of the Duchess of ANCASTER. A correspondent of the leading London journal, himself one of the GREATHEED family, writes that SARAH KEMBLE'S wonderful talent for acting was first discovered by Mr. BEREW GREATHEED, who, "passing accidentally through his wife's dressing-room, required her for some time standing before a cheval-glass, and rehearsing some passage from SHAKESPEARE with tragic fervor." The discernment of the gentleman must have been keener than that of the audiences who for years refused to acknowledge the genius of Mrs. SIDDONS, a confession only wrung from the public after a most protracted and laborious novitiate, beset with mortifications, and rendered unhappy by repeated failure.

A lady slept in a tree, the other night, under rather unpleasant circumstances. Miss THURSTON, who appears to share the somewhat current perception of the day that what men can do women can do, went up in a balloon. This exploit came off at Watertown, N. Y., and its impressiveness was increased by the fact that the fair aeronaut—unlike those who went up a year or two ago in Prof. LOWE'S "captive" balloon with matrimonial intent—ascended alone. Miss THURSTON, in common with not a few of her predecessors, found it easier, however, to go up than to come down. In attempting to do so, after traveling fifty miles and finding the darkness entering, her balloon, a large one, called the "Atlantic," got stuck in a tall birch tree in the midst of a dense forest. Fearing possible enemies on earth more than the dangers of the air, the lady remained suspended fifty feet from the ground during the whole night. With the dawn she strove to alight; but unhappily her rope was only thirty feet long, and terra firma was at least fifty. Strangely enough Miss THURSTON does not seem to have suspected the fact until she had lowered herself to the extremity of her line, there being no branches to help her so far down the trunk. In this dilemma, the adventurous girl, finding she could not get up again, dropped twenty feet to the ground and sustained considerable injuries. We are able to state, however, that these have not proved serious, and that both Miss THURSTON and the "Atlantic," have returned in safety to Watertown.

Since NAPOLEON lived and died in St. Helena, that island has been pursued by misfortune. Such, indeed, has been the unrelenting character of the disasters that have occurred there as almost to justify superstition concerning it. In the latter part of July, the first term of a long catalogue of woes, St. Helena was almost literally washed away by floods. Five hundred of the inhabitants were swept out of their houses and lost everything they possessed. All the roads were destroyed, and the island is now said to be uninhabitable. A Local Commission is inquiring into ways and means for bettering the condition of things; but people are going away fast, and it seems not impossible that St. Helena may become the desolate and solitary rock that it once was and has been so often sung.

A storm at sea is bad enough and a fire at sea is worse, but the horror of a combination of both is not easily imagined. To such double calamity was an English steaming vessel lately subjected on her passage from Sunderland to Thames. The craft, the Petrel, had a cargo of lime-shell, and on her second day out was caught in a stiff blow off Klinaird's Head. The force of the gale was such as to drive her far out to sea. In the night the waves, breaking heavily over the ship, ignited her cargo. The crew despite tremendous efforts, were unable to extinguish the flames; and thus the ill-fated Petrel bore wildly through the darkness, a terrible but magnificent sight to those who saw her. Of these there were numbers in several vessels; but the fury of the winds and the sea was such as totally to prevent any assistance. The unhappy crew gave themselves up for lost. For two whole days the Petrel was rushing, wrapped in fire, over the waters. Yet happily the conflagration had so far been restrained that no lives had been lost, when, on the third morning, a little Belgian smack, the Edouard Auguste, hove in sight, and, although a tremendous sea was running, bravely resolved to rescue the sufferers. This, with great risk and difficulty, was done. Several of the poor sailors were burned and shocked somewhat, but in no case seriously; and, with her guests thus nobly saved, the vessel bore safely away for port, leaving the Petrel still burning, and aground on the Dogger Bank.

Dramatic and Musical.
INCIDENTS AND PROSPECTS.

A week enlivened by no more considerable event than the proclamation of "The Princess of Trebizonde" as its sole novelty, can hardly be styled memorable. With the exception, however, of the opening of the Union-square Theatre, nothing else has occurred since last Sunday at the theatres calling for special notice. The public, however, are living on the future. "They eat the air, promise-crammed;" and, indeed, the prospects for a dramatic and musical season of uncommon, if not of unprecedented, brilliancy, were never more flattering. In tragedy, the names are mentioned of Mr. FORREST, Mr. BOOTH, Miss CUSHMAN, and Miss HERON as certain to grace the Metropolitan boards, to say nothing of other engagements not yet decided. In comedy, Mr. WALLACK, Mr. JEFFERSON, Mr. OWENS, Mr. FOX, and others, will delight their various admirers; and several new lady candidates for favor will, in this department, make their first essays in New-York. When to this list usual stock attractions of our theatres are added, and to these the two opera companies, the English opera headed by Mme. PARepa-ROSA, beginning Oct. 2, and the Italian, with Mlle. NILSSON as the chief feature, on Oct. 23; the admirable concert troupe to be introduced by Mr. DOLBY Oct. 9, which includes some of the very best of living singers, and who will vary their performances with oratorios; the fashionable and classic concerts of the Church Mane Association and the Philharmonic—it becomes clear that there will be no lack this season of theatrical and musical entertainment in New-York, and that much of it bids fair to be of a high order. During the present week several notable events are looked for. To-morrow night the celebrated tenor Herr WACHTEL will sing at the Stadt Theatre. "The Postilion of Lonjumeau" has been chosen as the opera for the occasion. The work was once much reckoned here but has been of late years little heard. Herr WACHTEL's chest C is awaited with great interest and will doubtless be received with immense satisfaction. The audience to-morrow night will probably be exceedingly numerous and the occasion one long to be remembered. On Friday, at Wallack's, Miss LYDIA THOMPSON is to have a benefit. The lady will act in comedy and likewise in burlesque. On the Monday following "Blue Beard" is to be revived. To-morrow, at the Grand Opera-house, Mr. GUSTAVUS FRIELING will act in Mr. DE WEST's drama of "Cushy Goofs," while at Niblo's Mr. EMMET is to come forth in a fresh play called "Carl, the Fiddler." At Booth's, "The Little Detective" will be brought out, with Miss LOTTA in six characters. We are not aware of intended changes elsewhere.... The Paris Pavilion Circus, which last night folded its tent after a most successful sojourn in Brooklyn, comes to New-York to-morrow week.

FIFTH-AVENUE THEATRE.

The good opinion of the mass of Mr. DALY's public has been secured by "Divorce," as the crowded houses of the past week fully testify; and the piece has been subjected to some curtailments and amendments that certainly improve it. It was obvious from the first that "Divorce" possessed many elements of popularity, and whatever defects a close criticism may find in it to object to, they have been insufficient to damage its success. Apart from its intrinsic merits, a comedy supported by talents so varied and so acceptable as those of Mr. DAVIDGE, Mr. LEWIS, Mr. HARKINS and Mr. WHITING,—of Miss MORANT, Mrs. GILBERT, Miss DAVENPORT and Miss MORRIS,—had undoubtedly excellent chances for prosperity. With all said and done regarding the pretensions of the writer of "Divorce" as a dramatist, it must be admitted that his works succeed, and whether this is the sure touchstone of desert or not, it is what fills the coffers of the treasury, and so, whatever the expectations of the author, must fully satisfy the manager.

THE VIENNA ORCHESTRA.

After the notice tairready accorded to the performances of the Vienna Orchestra at Steinway Hall, it seems hardly necessary to refer to the subject again except by way of testifying to the increased precision of the recitals of the instrumentalists, and to the increased pleasure later hearings of so gifted a baritone as Herr MUHLER have afforded. The concerts will extend over the present week. Thursday night, however, the proceedings at Steinway Hall being enacted in Brooklyn.

MR. DOLBY'S BALLAD CONCERTS.

The ballad concerts of Mr. GEORGE DOLBY, referred to above, will begin on the 9th of October. These entertainments will be of a high character, and as such should command the best class of Metropolitan attention. Mr. SANTLEY, Miss EDITH WYNNE, Mme. PATEY, Mr. W. H. CUMMINGS, and Mr. LEONARD SLOPER are to be the principal performers, and such names are quite enough to show of what stuff Mr. DOLBY's concerts will be composed. We take pleasure in calling particular attention, in good season, to the musical treat thus promised. A great deal of music of one sort or another may be listened to in New-York during a season; but music that is thoroughly excellent of its kind is more rare, and, when it is offered, the privilege should be warmly appreciated. The public are to be congratulated on a series of performances which, while furnishing a desirable variety, are sure to be everything in tastefulness of selection and superiority of execution that can reasonably be desired.

THE CHURCH MUSIC ASSOCIATION.

The rehearsals for the third season of the Church Music Association are expected to begin early in October. Our readers need hardly be told that this Society has been remarkably successful in the work that it has undertaken, and that so creditable a design so ably carried out deserves all possible encouragement. We learn that between seven and eight thousand dollars have been subscribed for the forthcoming season, and that the subscription list includes the names of many families and individuals, well known in our best circles for taste and devotion to art. Among the works to be performed are named the "Messe Solennelle" of BEETHOVEN, and the "Grand Mass" by SCHUBERT. These will be interpreted by three hundred in the chorus, and from seventy to eighty in the orchestra. Mr. GEORGE T. STRONG is still President of the Association, and the musical director and conductor continues, as heretofore, to be Dr. JAMES PECH.

The Newburg papers mention that HIRAM S. ROUSSY, of Newburg, died in that city Saturday week, of paralysis of the spine, aged forty-three years, two months, and twenty-eight days. He was an old-time negro minstrel performer, and had no superior as a banjoist. He traveled all over Europe in his early days of minstrelsy, creating a great sensation with his "Merry Bells of England," in which he imitated the sound by distant chimes. He was a member of a Masonic lodge in New-Orleans, and the funeral arrangements were taken in charge by the Masons of Newburg. ROUSSY was quite poor during his last days. Every time a minstrel troupe visited Newburg the old members always extended to him a charitable hand, and in some instances benefit nights were set apart for him. His remains were interred in St. George's Cemetery, in Newburg, on Monday.

The Newburg papers mention that HIRAM S. ROUSSY, of Newburg, died in that city Saturday week, of paralysis of the spine, aged forty-three years, two months, and twenty-eight days. He was an old-time negro minstrel performer, and had no superior as a banjoist. He traveled all over Europe in his early days of minstrelsy, creating a great sensation with his "Merry Bells of England," in which he imitated the sound by distant chimes. He was a member of a Masonic lodge in New-Orleans, and the funeral arrangements were taken in charge by the Masons of Newburg. ROUSSY was quite poor during his last days. Every time a minstrel troupe visited Newburg the old members always extended to him a charitable hand, and in some instances benefit nights were set apart for him. His remains were interred in St. George's Cemetery, in Newburg, on Monday.

The London Orchestra hears that the Queen's management will produce about Christmas an elaborate revival of "The Tempest," for which extensive scenic preparations have been made.... The Surrey Theatre is about to pass again into the management of Mr. SHERIDAN, who will open it during the present month with an original English drama, for which Mr. JULIAN HICKS and assistants are preparing scenery and effects. The company will include Mr. HENRY NEVILLE, Mr. E. F. EDGAR, Mr. J. G. WARDE and Miss FANNY HUDDART.... A meeting had been held at the Bankruptcy Court in London, in the case of WILLIAM LAUDERDALE MAITLAND, of No. 11 Thurloe-square, Brompton, a gentleman well known in theatrical circles, and who was formerly connected with the Lyceum Theatre. The petition for adjudication was presented in November last, and the proceedings have been adjourned from time to time to enable the bankrupt to arrange with his creditors. He now offered a composition of 1s in the pound, payable at three months upon the terms of the bankruptcy being annulled. After some opposition the proposal was agreed to by the necessary majority of creditors, and confirmed by the Court.... Mr. ALFRED ST. ALBYN died a few days ago in the Charing Cross Hospital in London, where he went, for one of the previous three weeks, under treatment for rapid consumption. Mr. ST. ALBYN was connected for some time with the Globe Theatre, and sustained the part of Faisecappa in the play of that name.... The management of the Gaiety Theatre, in London, announces a comedy, by Dr. WESTLAND MARSTON, in which Miss KATE SOPHIE ELLIOTT, Miss H. FARREN, Mr. WILLIAM RIGNOLD, Mr. J. G. TAYLOR and Mr. MACLEAN, will appear; also a new operatic extravaganza, by ALFRED THOMPSON, the original music by EMILE JONAS, in which Mlle. CLARY will make her first appearance in England.... The Paris Opera Comique has given DUGAZON the free entree to their house during the rest of his life, in acknowledgement of the services he rendered to the musical and theatrical world before, during the late supremacy of the Commune in Paris. It will be remembered that M. DUGAZON saved, by his intrepid and energetic behaviour, the Parisian theatres and opera houses from total destruction.... The Pall Mall Gazette notes that two stages have not been enough to contain Parisian curiosity, and even the Figaro cannot help crowding at the kind of plays with which the inhabitants of the capital are being regaled. This, with great risk and difficulty, was done. Several of the poor sailors were burned and shocked somewhat, but in no case seriously; and, with her guests thus nobly saved, the vessel bore safely away for port, leaving the Petrel still burning, and aground on the Dogger Bank.

INCIDENTS AND PROSPECTS.

A week enlivened by no more considerable event than the proclamation of "The Princess of Trebizonde" as its sole novelty, can hardly be styled memorable. With the exception, however, of the opening of the Union-square Theatre, nothing else has occurred since last Sunday at the theatres calling for special notice. The public, however, are living on the future. "They eat the air, promise-crammed;" and, indeed, the prospects for a dramatic and musical season of uncommon, if not of unprecedented, brilliancy, were never more flattering. In tragedy, the names are mentioned of Mr. FORREST, Mr. BOOTH, Miss CUSHMAN, and Miss HERON as certain to grace the Metropolitan boards, to say nothing of other engagements not yet decided. In comedy, Mr. WALLACK, Mr. JEFFERSON, Mr. OWENS, Mr. FOX, and others, will delight their various admirers; and several new lady candidates for favor will, in this department, make their first essays in New-York. When to this list usual stock attractions of our theatres are added, and to these the two opera companies, the English opera headed by Mme. PARepa-ROSA, beginning Oct. 2, and the Italian, with Mlle. NILSSON as the chief feature, on Oct. 23; the admirable concert troupe to be introduced by Mr. DOLBY Oct. 9, which includes some of the very best of living singers, and who will vary their performances with oratorios; the fashionable and classic concerts of the Church Mane Association and the Philharmonic—it becomes clear that there will be no lack this season of theatrical and musical entertainment in New-York, and that much of it bids fair to be of a high order.... During the present week several notable events are looked for. To-morrow night the celebrated tenor Herr WACHTEL will sing at the Stadt Theatre. "The Postilion of Lonjumeau" has been chosen as the opera for the occasion. The work was once much reckoned here but has been of late years little heard. Herr WACHTEL's chest C is awaited with great interest and will doubtless be received with immense satisfaction. The audience to-morrow night will probably be exceedingly numerous and the occasion one long to be remembered. On Friday, at Wallack's, Miss LYDIA THOMPSON is to have a benefit. The lady will act in comedy and likewise in burlesque. On the Monday following "Blue Beard" is to be revived. To-morrow, at the Grand Opera-house, Mr. GUSTAVUS FRIELING will act in Mr. DE WEST's drama of "Cushy Goofs," while at Niblo's Mr. EMMET is to come forth in a fresh play called "Carl, the Fiddler." At Booth's, "The Little Detective" will be brought out, with Miss LOTTA in six characters. We are not aware of intended changes elsewhere.... The Paris Pavilion Circus, which last night folded its tent after a most successful sojourn in Brooklyn, comes to New-York to-morrow week.

FIFTH-AVENUE THEATRE.

The good opinion of the mass of Mr. DALY's public has been secured by "Divorce," as the crowded houses of the past week fully testify; and the piece has been subjected to some curtailments and amendments that certainly improve it. It was obvious from the first that "Divorce" possessed many elements of popularity, and whatever defects a close criticism may find in it to object to, they have been insufficient to damage its success. Apart from its intrinsic merits, a comedy supported by talents so varied and so acceptable as those of Mr. DAVIDGE, Mr. LEWIS, Mr. HARKINS and Mr. WHITING,—of Miss MORANT, Mrs. GILBERT, Miss DAVENPORT and Miss MORRIS,—had undoubtedly excellent chances for prosperity. With all said and done regarding the pretensions of the writer of "Divorce" as a dramatist, it must be admitted that his works succeed, and whether this is the sure touchstone of desert or not, it is what fills the coffers of the treasury, and so, whatever the expectations of the author, must fully satisfy the manager.

THE VIENNA ORCHESTRA.

After the notice tairready accorded to the performances of the Vienna Orchestra at Steinway Hall, it seems hardly necessary to refer to the subject again except by way of testifying to the increased precision of the recitals of the instrumentalists, and to the increased pleasure later hearings of so gifted a baritone as Herr MUHLER have afforded. The concerts will extend over the present week. Thursday night, however, the proceedings at Steinway Hall being enacted in Brooklyn.

MR. DOLBY'S BALLAD CONCERTS.

The ballad concerts of Mr. GEORGE DOLBY, referred to above, will begin on the 9th of October. These entertainments will be of a high character, and as such should command the best class of Metropolitan attention. Mr. SANTLEY, Miss EDITH WYNNE, Mme. PATEY, Mr. W. H. CUMMINGS, and Mr. LEONARD SLOPER are to be the principal performers, and such names are quite enough to show of what stuff Mr. DOLBY's concerts will be composed. We take pleasure in calling particular attention, in good season, to the musical treat thus promised. A great deal of music of one sort or another may be listened to in New-York during a season; but music that is thoroughly excellent of its kind is more rare, and, when it is offered, the privilege should be warmly appreciated. The public are to be congratulated on a series of performances which, while furnishing a desirable variety, are sure to be everything in tastefulness of selection and superiority of execution that can reasonably be desired.

THE CHURCH MUSIC ASSOCIATION.

The rehearsals for the third season of the Church Music Association are expected to begin early in October. Our readers need hardly be told that this Society has been remarkably successful in the work that it has undertaken, and that so creditable a design so ably carried out deserves all possible encouragement. We learn that between seven and eight thousand dollars have been subscribed for the forthcoming season, and that the subscription list includes the names of many families and individuals, well known in our best circles for taste and devotion to art. Among the works to be performed are named the "Messe Solennelle" of BEETHOVEN, and the "Grand Mass" by SCHUBERT. These will be interpreted by three hundred in the chorus, and from seventy to eighty in the orchestra. Mr. GEORGE T. STRONG is still President of the Association, and the musical director and conductor continues, as heretofore, to be Dr. JAMES PECH.

SATURDAY, Sept. 16—P. M.

The Bank return shows a loss on the Green-back average of $3,194,000, and in Gold Notes of $536,400. The general line of Deposits is down $2,181,900 and the Circulation (a mistake in the return, we apprehend,) is down $953,600. With these unfavorable features, the loans have been further expanded $1,461,700.

The Treasury Office in New-York received during the week $3,968,303 in Gold from Customs; paid out $447,951 for Gold Interest, and sold $4,000,000 on Thursday last.

A few of the Money-lenders talked higher rates on call loan at the close of the week, and it would not be surprising after the present Bank Statement if there should be an advance; but on the actual transactions of the day the rates are 3@5 ₱ cent. and the offerings quite as free as early in the week.

The Stock Exchange did only half a day's work. The early adjournment was to witness the opening day of the beautiful and commodious improvements in the Exchange Building, which, at a cost of about $60,000, has utilized to its purposes and superbly embellished a costly building, heretofore deemed one of the worst planned and least convenient, as well as least paying structures in the City. There is general rejoicing among the Brokers that they are at last to have something like real comfort and accessibility in their halls for business.

With the exception of continued firmness in the Public Funds, as well as in the Gold Room, (at 114⅛@114 ₱ cent.,) the markets on the Exchange were dull, and on the Railways decidedly bearish. The official announcement of the long talked-of Scrip Dividend on Lake Shore depressed the Stock full 2 ₱ cent. No probable terms of such a Dividend, if made known, in the present indifferent or bearish temper of speculation, could have helped the stocks materially, and the surprise is that after so long a delay it should not have been further postponed to a more convenient season. The Executive Committee now declare 40 ₱ cent. Scrip on the present Capital of $35,000,000, or $14,000,000, upon which 66⅔ ₱ cent. is marked off as paid up Capital, and 33⅓ ₱ cent. reserved to be called in for Cash. This raises the Capital to $49,000,000, or within $1,000,000 of the charter limit, which million may hereafter be sold for the general use of the Company. The New-York Central Stock and Scrip were in the afternoon quoted ex-Dividend of 4 ₱ cent. The Western list was generally weak; the Southern State Bonds lower, on Tennessee and North Carolinas and the Miscellaneous Shares dull.

After 5 o'clock P. M., on the Street the following quotations were made as compared with Friday night:

FINANCIAL.

Connecticut Valley Railroad Company

BONDS!

Proposals will be received at the Connecticut River Banking Company, in Hartford, until 3 o'clock P. M. Saturday, Sept. 23, 1871, for the purchase of the whole or any part of

ONE MILLION DOLLARS

Of the First Mortgage Seven per Cent. Non-Taxable Bonds of the Connecticut Valley Railroad Company.

This is the whole issue, the first and only mortgage, and covers the entire property, equipment and franchise of the road.

The road has been built with cash subscriptions to the stock.

The Capital Stock is $1,500,000.

The amount paid in is $1,000,000, and the money is now used for the completion and thorough equipment of the road.

These Bonds are payable thirty years from Jan. 1, 1871.

They are registered at the office of the Controller of the State of Connecticut, and are free from all taxes, State, municipal and income.

They are in denominations of $1,000 each, with interest coupons attached, payable semi-annually, in January and July at the American Exchange National Bank, New-York, or Connecticut River Banking Company, Hartford, Conn.

The coupons are payable to the order of the registered holder thereof.

The line of the road is on the west bank of the Connecticut River, is forty-four miles in length, extending from Hartford to Saybrook on the Sound—touching all the important towns and villages on the route.

Passenger trains were running within 24 hours from the beginning of work on the road, the daily receipts from which are nearly equal to the interest on the mortgage Bonds.

Two additional passenger trains and also freight trains will be put on the line by Oct. 1st, 1871, and no doubt abroad that the Winter traffic will be large.

A cerunded check or currency for ten per cent of the par value of Bonds applied for must be inclosed with each application.

The accrued interest will be added to all accepted proposals from July 1, 1871, until the final payment, WHICH MAY BE AT THE OPTION OF THE PURCHASER, between that and maturing Oct. 1, 1871.

The sum advanced on proposals declined will be promptly returned.

Proposals may be addressed to

JOHN A. BUTLER,

Connecticut River Banking Company, Hartford, Conn., indorsed "Proposals for Bonds of the Connecticut Valley Railroad Company."

The right is reserved to decline all proposals which may be considered undesirable.

ROBINSON, CHASE & CO.,

NO. 18 BROAD-ST.,

OFFER FOR SALE THE BALANCE OF THE

CONSOLIDATED MORTGAGE Sinking Fund Bonds

OF THE

LAKE SHORE

AND

MICHIGAN SOUTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

COUPON BONDS—In denominations of $1,000, convertible into Registered as maturity of each coupon. Interest 7 per cent. per annum, payable semi-annually, January and July.

REGISTERED BONDS—In denominations of $1,000, $5,000, and $10,000, (without coupons,) in form similar to United States Registered Bonds, transferable on the books of the company at the option of owner to the holder. Interest 7 per cent. per annum, payable quarterly, January, April, July, and October.

The merit of these Bonds and the peculiar advantages possessed by the Registered Bonds in the quarterly payment of interest, and full PROTECTION against LOSS by FIRE, THEFT, or otherwise, commend them favorably to all careful and judicious investors, and we confidently recommend it as the most desirable investment in the market.

SOUTH CAROLINA RAILROAD COMPANY 7 PER CENT. FIRST MORTGAGE BONDS.

Principal due 1st January, 1893, and coupons payable in New-York 1st January and July.

These bonds are secured by mortgage in pursuance of a deed executed on the 1st of January, 1869, in which Henry Gourdin, H. P. Walker and James M. Calder are named as trustees, being the only mortgage upon the railway and rolling stock of the corporation, and are part of an issue made in conversion of sterling bonds amounting to £619,500 sterling, being the equivalent of the present currency of about $3,100,000, and less than $12,000 per mile, the length of railway being 263 miles.

The gross receipts of the Company for 1870 amounted to $1,500,000 in currency, expenses and renewals $800,000, showing profit of $682,244 71, or $258,244 71 in excess of $424 annual interest of 7 per cent, on $3,100,000 First Mortgage Bonds.

The South Carolina Railroad is one of the earliest built railways in the United States in its ability have ever been managed with care and and integrity, and the present condition of the property is that of complete efficiency. We recommend to investors its Mortgage Bonds, with the assurance of their being a first class security.

The above described bonds are offered for sale by the undersigned at 87½ per cent.

AMONG THE SHIP-BUILDERS.

Condition of Affairs in the Yards About the City.

Not a Vessel Building on Manhattan Island—Some Activity in the Greenpoint and Brooklyn Yards—Views of Leading Builders of Wooden Vessels.

The ship-building interest in the vicinity of New-York seems just now to have "spurted" into a briskness which, though not at all equal to that which distinguished it in ante-bellum times, nevertheless presents a marked contrast with the condition of things two years ago. In those yards which front on the East River in the City proper, however, the same dullness that has reigned therein since the close of the war still exists. Those once busy localities, where the air was made resonant with the clang of the anvil, the harsh rasp of the saw, and the taps of countless thousands in the hands of industrious mechanics, are now silent. The sites once occupied as ship-yards, are now used as lumber-yards, coal-yards, places for storage, and for other purposes. There is not a vessel being built on Manhattan Island today! Our reporter has visited the yards on the Long Island side of the rivet, and below will be found the result of his investigations:

The only yards in which building is going on in the neighborhood of New-York are the following: HENRY STEERS', Greenpoint; JOHN ENGLIS & SON'S, Greenpoint; LAWRENCE & FOULKES', Greenpoint; THOS. STACK'S, North Sixth-street, Williamsburg, and C. & R. POLHEMUS', foot of Bridge-street, Brooklyn. The large yards on the New-York side of the river, where Mr. WM. H. WEBB, Messrs. WESTERVELT & SON, and other noted builders used to turn out such splendid specimens of naval architecture, are all devoted to other purposes; and the yards on the Long Island side, other than those above mentioned, are unoccupied. In conversation with the proprietors of such yards as are now engaged in building, the TIMES' representative learned some important facts. The substance of this conversation we give below:

REPORTER—How do you account for the temporary briskness which prevails in your line of business just now?

BUILDER—Well, I hardly know how to account for it. The few orders we received surprised us as much as any one. We do not expect to see this present briskness last for a long time. The fact is we can do but very little until Congress comes to our relief in some way or other.

REPORTER—Would a repeal of the present tariff law, so far as it affects the materials for ship-building, help you?

BUILDER—Undoubtedly it would. Everything that now enters into the construction of a ship is taxed inordinately. Take for instance the hackmatack timber, of which the "knees" are made. The most of this comes from Canada. We get some from Maine, it is true, but not a great deal. Now this timber is taxed, and the tax added to the cost of transportation makes it come very dear to us. The same may be said of imported iron. The builder in Canada has none of this tariff to pay in either case. Again, we are compelled to pay much higher wages to our men than are paid in Canada; and, as a consequence, the building of a ship here is more costly than it is there. We are in no condition to compete with the builder in Canada; hence we cannot get the work which goes there.

REPORTER—Are there not other reasons why the building trade has been so dull, heretofore?

BUILDER—Well, yes. The plain fact is that for the past six years the world has been overstocked with ships; and this overstocking has arisen from divers causes. One, and probably the most prominent, and the latest of them is the building of great railroads. The Pacific Railroad across our own country, for instance, cut off not less than one hundred ships. Formerly, as you are well aware, all our domestic trade with California was carried on over ocean routes, either by way of the Isthmus, or round the Horn. Now it comes, for the most part, over the Pacific Railroad. Then, too, this road has actually shortened the distance between New-York and China and Japan, and thus thrown out the ships formerly in this trade. The goods that once came by ship from those countries are now carried by water only as far as San Francisco, where they are put on board the cars, and in eight or ten days thereafter they are in the hands of the merchant in New-York. Commerce invariably seeks the shortest route for transportation; and in this case the "cut-off" has been so great that the old ocean routes, except for the very best-built class of merchandise, are practically unused. When the other contemplated roads to the Pacific are built, this condition of things will, of course, be made worse for the shipping interest.

REPORTER—Do you have any fear as to the plethora of ships affecting our domestic trade?

BUILDER—I have sometimes thought it would affect us very seriously in this particular, though it may be some time yet before it does so. All depends upon the action of Congress. This much I know, that last year there were not less than two hundred ships in Europe waiting for the repeal of our Navigation laws, in order to pitch into our domestic trade at once. Of course this would throw our own ships out of employment to a very great extent, and would, as a consequence, injure the building interest still more. There is a principle of patriotism in this connection which is generally lost sight of; and it is contended by some that commerce has nothing whatever to do with patriotism. What I mean to say is this: if a farmer desires to sell a large quantity of grain, for instance, for European shipment, he cares nothing at all whether it goes in an American or foreign bottom. So long as he gets his price for the grain, that is all he desires. Let American commerce look out for itself, is his motto, and he is not anxious for any legislation that shall help it onward. Now the agricultural interest, considered in point of numbers, leads the commercial, and politicians will of course have a special regard to that interest which wields the more potent influences at the ballot-box. That is one great reason, I apprehend, why Congress has done nothing for us as yet.

REPORTER—How about the construction of iron ships?

BUILDER—Well, that seems to be all the rage just now, and it is unaccountable to me, though, being an interested party I may be prejudiced. I have never yet seen it demonstrated that an iron ship is more serviceable than a well-built wooden one. My preferences are, of course, for wooden vessels. There is a great deal of nonsense put forth just now as to the superior durability of iron ships. This much is certain, if an iron vessel strikes she's gone. But with a wooden ship there is a chance of saving life, vessel and cargo even then. I may be mistaken, but I think that this rage for iron ships will play itself out after awhile, and then whatever building is to be done will be of wood.

REPORTER—I don't see any repairing of vessels going on in any of the yards. That used to be an important item; how do you account for its absence now? Even if the building interest has slackened vessels must undergo repairs, and I am surprised to find that very little of this class of work is being done.

BUILDER—That is easily explained. The absence of this class of work had its beginning in the foolish (I might say almost suicidal) action of the journeymen ship-carpenters, calkers, riggers and ship-joiners. About five years ago we had a great deal of repairing to do. Although the building interest had slackened materially—for all that was then being done was the completing of vessels contracted for long before—we still could keep the men employed at repair work. But, unfortunately for themselves and for us, the men struck for higher wages—more than we could afford to pay—and the owners thereupon took their vessels to other places for repairs. Many of them went to Boston ports, and the others to the Long Island and Connecticut shores, where the work could be done much cheaper. We lost the trade, and up to the time have regained none of it; and though wages have come down, I don't know as we ever shall.

REPORTER—What wages are you now paying to carpenters?

BUILDER—Three dollars and a half a day.

REPORTER—Do you find men sufficient for your purposes?

BUILDER—As yet, yes; but should a necessity arise for turning out a large number of ships speedily we would, I think, find ourselves in a strait. You see a great many ship-carpenters, joiners, calkers, &c., have entered into other avocations, and having become settled down in them, are unwilling to leave them. Numbers have turned their attention to house-carpentering, cabinet-making, &c.; others are keeping small stores; others, again, have settled down on small farms out West. In fact they have scattered and entered into countless branches of business. I know some that are conductors and drivers on our City railroads. One of the best men I ever had in my employ is now a carman, and doing well. Lately I asked him to come into the yard again, but he refused, alleging as a reason that he had built up a good paying business with his horse and cart; that he never made less than $15 per week, and that he did not feel justified in giving up this, a surety, for what he was convinced was only a temporary and partial revival of his legitimate trade, even though, for a time, he should get $3 50 per day by so doing.

REPORTER—Have any boys entered the business as apprentices?

BUILDER—Not one, so far as I know, within the past five years. How could they, when there has been no business doing? You can't make theoretical ship-carpenters. Of all other trades it is the one which must be learned by actual practice. One of my own sons, the other day, canvassed this matter for himself. At first he thought he would come into the yard here and learn the trade of me. I did not encourage that idea in him, for I knew the business was, to say the least, precarious; so he finally decided to become a house-carpenter, (as he was determined to have a trade of some kind,) and I heartily approved his choice. The absence of young journeymen is one of the reasons why I say that if there were a sudden call for ships (produced by another war, or by some other cause,) we should find ourselves lacking in American mechanics, and would have to depend on foreign journeymen, in a great part, to do our work. It is a pity, too, for our own mechanics are far superior to those of other countries, considered either as to the quantity or quality of the work they can turn out in any given time. Many merchants who have had ships built in Canada, have told me that they would have preferred to have them built here, so far as the quality of the mechanism and the speed with which they could be turned off the stocks are concerned, but they did not feel warranted in incurring the extra expense that would result if they did so. The fact is, we can beat the world on ship-building.

REPORTER—Then, to sum up, your idea is, that this increased activity in the business is only temporary?

BUILDER—I say, as I said before, that the business will be affected for better or for worse by three things: 1st, By Congressional action; 2d, by the cessation of the present furor for iron ships; and 3d, by the construction of great railroads from ocean port to ocean port. At present, I am of opinion that the trade is not materially better than it was last year. What new work we now have on hand will do very little more than recompense us for the long time that our ship-yards have been lying idle.

Below will be found a summary of the work now being prosecuted, and also of the vessels that have been built during the past twelve months:

HENRY STEER'S yard, Greenpoint.—Mr. STEERS has now on the stocks, for the Government, a steamer (propeller) to be used as a dredge-boat in the Mississippi River, and also as a United States transport for the Western waters when occasion requires. She will be stationed for the most part just above the delta of the river, and engaged in keeping a certain depth of water on the bar in that locality. She is to be 190 feet long, 32 feet breadth of beam, and 14 feet depth of hold. She will have two engines of 300 horse-power each, now being built by ROCHE & SON.

At this yard there is also being built a large derrick for the corporation of New-York, to be used under the direction of the Commissioners of Docks and Piers, in the construction of the contemplated new wharves in this City. Its dimensions are 100 by 60 feet, and it will be fitted up with most powerful machinery for lifting and placing the large blocks of stone of which the new piers are to be constructed. Attached to this derrick there will be a pile-driver of great power.

During the past year Mr. STEERS has built a ferry-boat for the Shore Line Railroad, to run from New-London to Groton, Conn., where, as many of our readers may recollect, the old horse-boat used to convey passengers. This boat is 200 feet long, 37 feet breadth of beam and 10 feet depth of hold. He also rebuilt the yacht Palmer. He now has contracts for building three steamers—one for the New-Orleans trade; one, a ferry-boat, to run on the Hunter's Point Ferry as a companion boat to the Southampton, and the third is to run on the route between New-Orleans and Havana.

JOHN ENGLIS & SON'S yard, Greenpoint.—At this yard there is now being built a steamer (propeller) for Messrs. ALEXANDRE & SON, to be a companion boat to the City of Merida, built at this yard about one year and a half ago, and now running on the New-York and Mexican Mail Steam-ship line. She is to be 250 feet long, 37 feet breadth of beam, and 26½ feet depth of hold, and to be fitted up in the same style as the Merida.

Messrs. ENGLIS & SON have just completed a steamer for MENDEZ & CO., to be run on the coasting route between the various Cuban ports. She is 900 tons burden, 220 feet long, 35 feet 9 inches breadth of beam, and 11½ feet depth of hold. Her engine is 32-inch cylinder and 11 feet stroke of piston.

At this yard also, the ferry-boat Martha has just been rebuilt for the Greenpoint Ferry Company. She has everything new above the water-line.

This firm have a contract for building a side-wheel steamer for the New-England and Nova Scotia Steam-ship Company. She is to be 230 feet long, 34 feet breadth of beam, and 14 feet depth of hold.

Messrs. LAWRENCE & FOULKES' yard, Greenpoint.—Messrs. LAWRENCE & FOULKES are building a side-wheel steamer for the Morri nata Steam-ship Company, to ply on the East River between one of the lower slips and Harlem. She has 160 feet length of keel, 27 feet breadth of beam, and 9½ feet depth of hold. The dimensions of the engine now being constructed by Messrs. FLETCHER, HARRISON & CO., are: cylinder, 44 inches, stroke of piston, 8 feet. The joiner-work of this boat is to be similar to that of the steamer Morrisania.

A new steamer for the Harlem Navigation Company is also being built at this yard. Her dimensions are 170 feet length of keel, 26 feet breadth of beam, and 9½ feet depth of hold. Her engines, also being built by Messrs. FLETCHER, HARRISON & CO., are to be 48 inches cylinder, and 8 feet stroke of piston. The joiner-work of this boat is to be patterned after that of the Sylvan Glen, now plying between Fulton Ferry and Harlem. Both these boats will be running by Jan. 1, 1872.

During the past year Messrs. LAWRENCE & FOULKES have built the steamer Morrisania, companion boat to the Mosa, now running in the employ of the Harlem Navigation Company. She is 155 feet long, 27 feet breadth of beam, and 8½ feet depth of hold. Her engines were built by Messrs. HUNTSMAN & WHITTAKER, of Brooklyn.

Also, the steamer Martha's Vineyard, for the New-Bedford and Martha's Vineyard Steamship Company, used exclusively for conveying passengers to the Methodist camp-meeting ground at Martha's Vineyard. Her dimensions are 170 feet length of keel, 28 feet breadth of beam and 8½ feet depth of hold. Her engines were built by Messrs. HUNTSMAN & WHITTAKER, of Brooklyn.

Also, the steam propeller Alfred L. West, for the Sandy Hook towing. The boat is 100 feet long, 22 feet breadth of beam and 10½ feet depth of hold.

THOMAS STACK'S yard, foot of North Sixth-street, Williamsburg.—Mr. STACK is building, for the United States Government, a propeller steamer to be used as a tender for light-houses on the Pacific coast. Her dimensions are: Length on deck, 165 feet; breadth of beam, 28 feet; Depth of hold, 12 feet. She is to be fitted up with one compound engine having cylinders of 26 and 52 inches, and 24 inches stroke of piston.

During the past year Mr. STACK built the steamer Florida, which is of the following dimensions: 163 feet on deck, 31 feet breadth of beam, and 10 feet depth of hold. This steamer, it will be remembered, was seized by the United States Government on suspicion of being engaged to carry arms and ammunition to the Cuban insurgents, but was subsequently released, after which she was sold to parties in Canada, and is now employed as a coaster between ports in the British Dominions.

Messrs. C. & R. POLLION'S yard, foot of Bridge-street, Brooklyn.—Messrs. POLLION have nothing on the stocks at present. During the past year they have been mainly engaged in building yachts, as follows:

The Dreadnaught, (schooner yacht,) built for Capt. SAMUELS; size, 121 feet keel, 24½ feet breadth of beam, and 11 feet depth of hold.

The Agnes, (schooner yacht,) built for EDWARD HARVEY; size, 90 feet length of keel, 16½ feet breadth of beam, and 8 feet depth of hold.

The Fearless, (sloop yacht,) built for J. R. MAXWELL; size, 60 feet length of keel, 18½ feet breadth of beam, and 9 feet depth of hold.

They have also built the propeller Wm. Orton, dispatch-boat of the Western Union Telegraph Company. The dimensions of this boat are: 60 feet length of keel, 18 feet breadth of beam, and 6 feet depth of hold; tonnage, about 65 tons.

Also, the elevator Scotia, for the International Elevator Company. SIZE—35 feet long, 22 feet breadth of beam, and 9 feet depth of hold.

Among the prominent repair-jobs done by this firm is the rebuilding of the ship William F. Storer, (now the Hamilton Fish,) a large vessel of 1,693 tons, which, it will be remembered, was burned about one year ago, while lying at her dock adjoining the slip of the Fulton Ferry. This vessel is owned by Messrs. CHARLES H. MARSHALL & Co.

Messrs. POLLION also lengthened the steamer Zodiac, belonging to MURRAY, FERRIS & CO. This steamer was cut in two amidships, and an addition of 45 feet made to her length.

The above comprises all the work that is now doing, or that has been done during the past year, in the vicinity of New-York.

Mr. BERGH intends after this year to close his yard at Greenpoint, (the property has already been rented to parties for carrying on other avocations,) and will transfer his business to Chester, Pa., where he intends to enter into the building of iron vessels.

THE TORPEDO TRAGEDY.

Disposition of the Seized Explosives—They are Thrown into the River—Death of Mr. Goldschmidt.

The scene of the late torpedo disaster, at No. 120 Beekman-street, continues to attract large numbers of curious visitors. Capt. NEARY, of the Second Precinct, keeps a detail of Police on the premises to warn off all intruders. Were it not for this precaution the building would be overrun with people, and possibly more damage result from the unexploded torpedoes, yet supposed to be scattered about in the débris. Several of these exploded under the feet of the officers yesterday.

In the afternoon the four cases, containing 25,000 of the missiles, were taken charge of by Mr. CHARLES E. GILDERSLEEVE, Chief of the Bureau of Combustibles, and conveyed to Fire-man's Hall, where the other vaults were. The eight other cases, containing 50,000 of the infernal explosives, which the same officer had seized during July. The entire lot was placed on a truck, and, under the supervision of Mr. GILDERSLEEVE and his assistants, was transferred to the Fire Department steamer John Faucet, out in the middle of the North River. With great care each case was opened and the contents thrown into the seething waters. Thus 75,000 of the death-dealing "toys" were disposed of.

There now remains in the shattered store only a quantity of fire-crackers, some rockets, candles, flags, &c. One of the Fire Patrol discovered several of the so-called "double-headers," a dangerous pyrotechnic, the sale of which has long since been interdicted by law. If what is rumored be true, there has been at various times a mass of explosive and combustible material stored in the store sufficient to have blown up the entire block. Now that the whole has been cleared out, the City are now stocked with dangerous stuff, liable at any moment to scatter death and destruction around.

Mr. MICHAEL GOLDSCHMIDT, one of the firm of KLUEBER & GOLDSCHMIDT, who was injured in the explosion in Beekman-street, on Thursday, died yesterday noon at his residence, No. 97 Dean-street, Brooklyn, near Smith-street, where he had been removed from the City Hospital in this City. Coroner JONAS took charge of the remains and impaneled the following jurymen: Herman Goldsmith, No. 237 Gold-street; B. Schellenberg, No. 127 Duffield-street; J. Adler, No. 606 Fulton-avenue; Isador Norden, No. 121 Bridge-street; M. Sternsberger, No. 226 Bridge-street; S. Strauss, No. 97 Concord-street; M. L. Hyman, No. 1 Myrtle-avenue; M. Weekaler, No. 445 Gold-street; and S. Lederer, No. 159 Navy-street. The inquest will be held on Wednesday next.

The deceased will be buried on Monday morning, at 10 o'clock, at the Jewish Cemetery, and the remains will be escorted by the Mount Nebo Lodge, F. & A. M.; Washington Lodge, I. O. B. B.; Reuban Lodge, I. O. of L., and Samuel Lodge, I. O. B. B., Brooklyn.

The Alleged Gold Conspiracy.

The operators in gold and stocks spent their leisure time yesterday in discussing the possible effect of the action of Judge BEDFORD in charging the Grand Jury to find bills against parties who were engaged in the prosecution of speculations which were likely to result injuriously to the mercantile community. The gentlemen who had been engaged in the business were disposed to treat the matter lightly, and maintained that it was an unwarrantable interference with their affairs, they claiming that they had a right to do as they pleased with the gold or greenbacks that they bought. One plan which they proposed to try, by way of evading any enactment, was to refuse to lend gold at all, and thereby compel those who must borrow to purchase it in the market for cash and return it the next day through the clearing-house. In this way the bull operators would be able to make, as profit, the difference between cash and regular transactions. But this movement will fail unless there is a combination, and if a clique should be formed to carry out such a scheme, it will fall under the ban of at least a forced construction of the Conspiracy law. It is stated on good authority that this action of Judge BEDFORD's originated with certain importers, who requested him to apply the law to such parties as were engaged in squeezing the loan rate in the gold market. They urged that the course of these men was prejudicial to the interests of commerce, as exchange was deranged, and values were unsettled, and that the power vested with the Court to deal in matters of this character. The Grand Jury, Judge BEDFORD considered this question, and finally resolved to do as he had been requested. Next week a paper, numerously signed, will be presented Judge BEDFORD, commending his action and urging him to prosecute all conspirators against the peace and dignity of the State, represented by the importers, who are on the more liberal side of the market. The banks are, it is alleged, lending their aid to these movements for crippling the finances of the street by taking on special deposit, coin certificates, and lending the money, which is deposited by the supporters and other merchants, upon them. In this way—supposing the specie reserve in the banks to be $30 millions—the clique in gold may hold four millions of their own, and may borrow three millions more, on such collateral as cannot be disturbed. This leaves but three millions for the legitimate uses of the merchants, who, by not protesting against this course of the banks, furnish a stick with which to break their own backs. It is probable that the action of Judge BEDFORD will have the effect of deterring operators who might otherwise be induced to combine, for the purpose of squeezing the gold or greenback market, from doing so.

A Boy Ground to Pieces in an Flax Crusher.

JOHN KELLY, 17 years old, employed in Golding's Flint Works, at Trenton, N. J., while walking along the second story of the factory, on Friday night, about 10 o'clock, stumbled and fell through a hole in the floor into the flint crusher below. He was run into the wheels and his body passed out into the water below, literally ground up. The body was recovered in a horribly mangled condition, and totally unrecognizable.
